

POEMS OF ECSTASY
AND LONGING

RUMI
THE BOOK OF LOVE

Translations & Commentary by

COLEMAN BARKS

Translations and Commentary by

Coleman Barks

with John Moyne, Nevit Ergin, A. J. Arberry, Reynold Nicholson, and M. G. Gupta

Rumi
the Book
of Love

Poems of Ecstasy and Longing

HarperCollins e-books

for Judith Orloff

Contents

Preface	xi
Introduction: The Magnificent Regions of the Heart	xvii
A Brief Account of Rumi's Life	xxi
1. Spontaneous Wandering	1
Excuse my wandering . . .	3
Five Things	3
The Many Wines	4
Cooked Heads	6
Where You Love From	6
You've so distracted me . . .	7
In your light I learn how to love . . .	7
Drumsound rises on the air . . .	8
Are you jealous of the ocean's generosity? . . .	8
There's Nothing Ahead	8
2. Sabbet : Who You Talking To?	10
Response to Your Question	12
If you want what visible reality can give . . .	13
Special Plates	13
You Are Not Your Eyes	14
What Was Said to the Rose	15
The Music	15
Imra'u 'l-Qays	16
3. The Superabundance of Ordinary Being	18
Zuleikha	19
Put This Design in Your Carpet	20
The Road Home	21
This Is Enough	22

Uzayr	22
Out of nowhere a horse . . .	23
Amazed Mouth	23
Birdsong, wind . . .	24
Begin	24
4. Sudden Wholeness	25
This Market	26
The Music We Are	26
Walnuts	27
You that come to birth and bring the mysteries . . .	29
No Better Gift	29
This moment this love comes to rest in me . . .	30
The clear bead at the center changes everything . . .	30
A thousand half-loves . . .	30
Pattern	30
Auction	31
5. Escaping into Silence	32
Quietness	33
Some Kiss We Want	33
The Waterwheel	34
Blessing the Marriage	35
Two Days of Silence	35
I hear nothing in my ear but your voice . . .	36
Which is worth more, a crowd of thousands . . .	36
Passage into Silence	37
6. A New Life	38
Escaping to the Forest	41
Love comes sailing through, and I scream . . .	41
Any Chance Meeting	42
Nasuh's Changing	42
If you love love . . .	42
What I say makes me drunk . . .	43
The Circle	43
7. Grief	45
The Death of Saladin	46
Birdwings	47
The Silent Articulation of a Face	47

The Allure of Love	49
Sky-Circles	49
I Throw It All Away	50
Your Face	50
I've broken through to longing now . . .	51
The center leads to love . . .	51
My work is to carry this love . . .	51
Pale sunlight . . .	51
The Purpose of Emotion	52
The ground's generosity takes in our compost . . .	52
8. Tavern Madness	53
I am a glass of wine with dark sediment . . .	55
Smoke	55
I'm Not Saying This Right	56
Who Says Words with my Mouth?	56
We have a huge barrel of wine, but no cups . . .	57
Real value comes with madness . . .	57
A Cap to Wear in Both Worlds	58
Midnight, but your forehead . . .	58
There's a strange frenzy in my head . . .	58
Fringe	59
Drunks fear the police . . .	59
The Ache and Confusion	60
Let the lover be disgraceful, crazy . . .	60
Wonder Without Willpower	60
9. Absence	62
Like Light Over This Plain	64
Candlelight Becomes Moth	65
The Basket of Fresh Bread	65
When you are with everyone but me . . .	67
This Torture	68
10. Animal Energies	69
Think that you're gliding out from the face of a cliff . . .	73
The Public Bath	73
Mashallah	74
Spirit and Body	75
Breadmaking	75

Sexual Urgency and True Virility	78
Two Ways of Running	83
11. Love's Secret	86
Close to Being True	88
What Hurts the Soul?	88
Love is the way messengers . . .	89
Hidden Inside	89
If everyone could see what love is . . .	90
They try to say what you are, spiritual or sexual . . .	91
Come to the orchard in spring . . .	91
12. Love's Discipline	92
Who Makes These Changes?	93
Drowning	93
The Dog Problem	94
Ziker	94
The Core of Masculinity	96
Clear Being	96
The Soul's Friend	97
Longing	98
The morning wind spreads its fresh smell . . .	98
What Draws You?	98
Fear	99
A Teacher's Pay	99
Looking into the Creek	100
The Polisher	100
13. Shift from Romance to Friendship	102
Burnt Kabob	103
Sitting in the Orchard	104
The Prince of Kabul	104
The Wrist	111
If the beloved is everywhere . . .	112
The King, the Handmaiden, and the Doctor	112
Reason has no way to say . . .	117
14. Union	118
The Sunrise Ruby	120
The Generations I Praise	121

One Swaying Being	121
Held like this, to draw in milk . . .	122
Hangover Remorse	122
Soul, Heart, and Body One Morning	123
Today, like every other day, we wake up empty . . .	123
Out beyond ideas of wrongdoing and rightdoing . . .	123
15. Die Before You Die	124
Judge a moth by the beauty of its candle . . .	124
Husam	124
Lovers are alive to the extent . . .	125
That Quick	126
Empty Boat	126
In the slaughterhouse of love they kill only . . .	127
I Trust You	127
Imadu'l-Mulk	128
You have said what you are . . .	129
Some nights stay up till dawn . . .	129
16. Harsh Evidence	130
Kharraqani's Marriage	132
Harsh Evidence	133
The Stupid Things I've Done	133
Candle at Noon	134
Dervishes	134
Doves	134
When Words Are Tinged with Lying	135
There You Are	136
A night full of talking that hurts . . .	137
There's a shredding that's really a healing . . .	137
Dance, when you're broken open . . .	138
All I know of spirit . . .	138
Your Defects	138
17. Meditation Pavane	139
Rules About Restraint	142
The Company of Lovers	142
The Look That Opens	143
Straw and Grasses	143
Friend, our closeness is this . . .	144

18. Love Dogs	145
The Ocean Surge	145
Love Dogs	146
Inside water, a waterwheel turns . . .	147
No better love than love with no object . . .	147
A Great Wagon	147
Blasphemy and the Core	148
You're song . . .	149
Keep walking, though there's no place to get to . . .	149
19. One Stroke Down	150
Lightning, your presence . . .	151
I can break off from anyone . . .	151
The Friend comes into my body . . .	151
Wooden Cages	152
More Range	153
Ayaz and the King's Pearl	153
Hallaj	156
20. Love's Excess	157
The Source of Joy	159
Roses Underfoot	160
Poetry	161
Birdsong from Inside the Egg	161
Eastern Mystery	162
No Flag	163
21. Love's Bewilderment	164
God only knows, I don't . . .	165
I reach for a piece of wood. It turns into a lute . . .	165
In complete control, pretending control . . .	165
Moses and the Shepherd	166
The minute I heard my first love story . . .	169
Morning Wind	170
The Ocean's Motion	170
Ignorance	171
22. Lord of the Heart	173
I am so small I can barely be seen . . .	174
Eyes	175
I am filled with you . . .	175

When you feel your lips becoming infinite . . .	176
The Granary	176
The Gazing-House	178
The Guest House	179
The One Thing You Must Do	181
This We Have Now	182
A Note on Translation	183
Notes	185
Index of Titles and First Lines	195
About the Author
Credits
Cover
Copyright
About the Publisher

Preface

I have sold too many books. Rumi translations have no business cresting in a wave of over half a million. It's like selling picnic tickets to an unmarked minefield. You wouldn't expect there to be a rush, but somehow there is. I may have left out something big and basic, like lowercase islam (submission). This love poetry is meant to obliterate you lovers. Rumi wants us to surrender. I bow to the grandeur of his full prostration. I never want to diminish that. This is not Norman Vincent Peale urging cheerfulness, conventional morality, and soft-focus, white-light feel-good, nor is this New Age tantric energy exchange. This is giving your life to the one within that you know as Lord, which is a totally private matter. No one except you can judge how that is going. But if you're not doing it, Rumi says, you are wasting your time here. Where's the solace of that statement? I once told a greeting card company that wanted to put Rumi verses on a card, "Rumi's poetry wants to dissolve the lovers. Annihilation is the point." There was a long silence on the other end. "Is there a holiday?"

Maybe we're ripe for Rumi's knowing, his way of love. I hope so. I take great delight in meeting bright twelve-year-olds who love certain Rumi poems, such as "The Guest House." They know the media and their community have lied to them about love, with all the fake love stories. They hear Rumi trying to tell them some truth about love, and they appreciate it. Maybe it's time to hear about going-in, about the joy of the witness in love, in meditation, in dreams, time to meet the one who looks into the creek.

Maybe we long now for the silence he loves. Say we're tiny blind cavefish swimming a gorgeous dark. We love the mountain the cave is inside, and somehow we love the sun, even though we haven't seen it and maybe never will. That's the love these poems sing, so how come they're wildly popular? I don't know.

In Marina del Rey, a posh southern California beach community, there's a side of a building painted shades of blue, on the left where Washington meets the beach. It has a Rumi quote high up in the right-hand corner. The ground floors of the beachside condos are garages stacked with Corvettes and Lexi and Jaguars, mostly shiny black, Bentleys, old BMW convertibles, fancy Lincoln off-road vehicles, and custom cars with no brand name. Upstairs among the Chinese objets and the Edwardian sideboards and the Motherwells, more often than not you will find on the thick glass, stylishly low, bedside table a well-read copy of The Essential Rumi.

A creative writing teacher on the prime-time show Judging Amy holds up two books, The Great Gatsby and The Essential Rumi, "Read these and learn how to write." Alec Baldwin has the book briefly in his hand in a movie whose title I can't recall. That book has achieved the cultural status of an empty Diet Coke can! It's everywhere. It's recommended summer reading in a two-page newsletter put out by a women's clothing store, Kathleen Sommers of San Antonio.

Philip Glass goes on world tour with Monsters of Grace, a choral piece using Rumi's words. Donna Karan reads Rumi on the fashion runway showing her new line. Madonna and Demi Moore read his poems on a Deepak CD. What to make of Rumi-mania? This too shall pass? Of course it will. For the first twenty years of the last century, I have heard, the most read book of poetry was Fitzgerald's Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, far and away. No one reads that much now but graduate students.

I remember standing in the Intimate Bookstore in Chapel Hill in the late 1950s reading Walter Bennett's This Is My Beloved, a gift book of love poetry that every now and then mentions pubic hair, as I recall. There were other lightweights in the same area. I thought of them as books people bought and gave each other but never actually read. The packaging implied something sweet and romantic inside. There were Japanese haiku collections and very skinny pastel Emily Dickinsons on that shelf too, which is a violation of the Truth in Labeling Act. She and Basho are not easy company. Rod McKuen was nearby. The poetry community, with good reason, sees popularity as suspect. Billy Collins is having to fight that, a little. Maya Angelou has signed on with Hallmark.

But Idylls of the King my foot, I am more serious about living, and was even in the 1950s. I never bought books from the candy shelf. I gave my sexy Russian-Jewish college sweetheart a big collection of e. e. cummings. In the slipshod mucus etcetera, we were undergraduates who started a magazine whose first issue got banned by the Honor Council, and I had published a very strange Wolfean short story in the Carolina Quarterly. In my button-down I was deep into Colin Wilson and the mystics mentioned in The Outsider. Hesse, Boehme, Eckhart. I had Evelyn Underhill's Mysticism by my garret bed, and I told people I wanted to teach a course in mysticism. There were no mysticism courses at any college I ever went to, Berkeley and North Carolina.

Let's say there are two shelves, one with the true mystics and at the front of the store, the fad love-books. I want this on the former, please. Jelaluddin Rumi and Shamsi Tabriz are real. They gave the human condition one of the best shots it's been given. Rumi's poetry records that Friendship, and that accounts for its wide appeal. Forget the movie stars. I met a guy behind the counter at West Building Supply in Athens, Georgia, who asked deep questions about the Delicious Laughter collection. "What's this with Eyes Shut Facing Eyes Wide Open?" Sit down with him. It may be this book will make it to the front of the store for Valentine's, but it's too rebellious to be there. It will not really behave itself anywhere in the store, not on the Islamic shelf, not in the poetry section, although maybe with the cookbooks. It likes cookbooks.

Alice Munro has a collection of stories called Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage. I've not read it, but I might. I like to watch the changing moods and nuances of falling in and out of love, and so does Rumi. He's not some mystic snob. He sees the beauty and importance of anything human beings do, no matter how scandalous or violent. The slipping and sliding around sex, the posturing of combatants prior to combat. But he always uses human incident as a lens to look into soul growth. The idea of commitment, that staple of psychology, doesn't come up, nor any fear of intimacy scolding, no shoulds and oughts.

It doesn't matter that you've broken your vow
a thousand times. Still come,
and yet again, come.

Rumi was an enlightened lover, a true human being, realized, whatever you want to call those who get to be deeply themselves. I had a dream once where I felt the grace of a continuing connection with my teacher, Bawa Muhaiyaddeen, who told me to do this Rumi work. Bawa was also a true human being. The transmission from him in me was, in the dream, visible in my eyes and also apparent in the currency, the popularity, of Rumi's poetry. My advice with this book, then, is to try, as he says, to listen for the presences inside poems. Connect there with an open heart, and follow the oceanfrog if he starts for home.¹

I have been lucky (I guess) not to have to write for a living. I taught school, and now the retirement and the social security are enough. That's not to say I don't cash the Rumi royalty checks and go on NPR to talk about poetry. I do. But the fame and fortune numbers don't motivate me. I wait for the next poem. That keeps me going, what Robert Bly calls the honey of words. The taste and the taste again. Though that sounds a little too pure. I want recognition and reward as much as anyone.

And to be absolutely clear, neither this book nor its title was my idea. My editors at Harper San Francisco, and my agent, suggested the project. But as I've gotten into putting it together, I have made the book mine, perhaps to their chagrin. I'm not positive, but I'll bet they expected more of a lean toward flowers than toward annihilation. There are flowers here certainly. The sweetness in much of Rumi is undeniable. Anyway, your editorial instincts were right, and I'm very grateful, Steve, Kris, John, Eric, Kathi, Reid.

I once calculated that Rumi books sell at least a hundred a day right through weekends and holidays, while my own writing goes at about twelve copies a month, worldwide. Those numbers keep me humble. I am just about the humblest person one could ever meet. And I do look at the dotcom numbers. Maybe it's true to say that this writing is for fortune and fame as well as the pouring forth of vision and revision. Oh, what is so tiresome and fatuous as a mystic poet talking sales and mixed motivation? I do not know. Where is Jim Dickey when we need him. But listen. I have thought of a wisdom.

THIS IS THE MATERIAL PLANE
AND EVERY OUTWARD THING WE DO IS INNER WORK

Sew that on a sampler and hang it in the kitchen. Or,

THIS IS THE MATERIAL PLANE
AND IT COULD USE A GOOD SANDING

Poetry and music are two great mysteries of human consciousness. Rumi lets them pour through as a beauty we are, and a kind of a home too.

COLEMAN BARKS
Athens, GA
July 18, 2002

Introduction:

The Magnificent Regions of the Heart

In certain places and times the current of mystical awareness runs deep and strong, more so than in others. Among the Greeks in the sixth century B.C. and also in India and China during that century. Jesus and the desert fathers. The Hassidic masters in Poland and Russia in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and the Zen masters in Japan during the same period were also part of an inexplicable flooding.

In the Persian empire from the eleventh to the fourteenth century a brilliant flowering of awareness came among the Sufis, and especially the poets. Jelaluddin Rumi (1207–1273) was one of those conductors of knowing and being. Sufis call Rumi the Qutb, the pole, of love. Gilani (d. 1166) was the pole of power and Ibn Arabi (1165–1249), of knowledge. Through Rumi comes a transmission of the divine to this planet in the regions of love. His poetry is a record of his enduring the experience of living at the core. In each human being there is a meeting with the divine. That intersection is the heart.

Sometimes we sense that love is our expertise, despite the obviously murderous bent of these days and hours. Still, we do love in many different ways. Let me count them. There are as many ways of loving as there are people, and that wildflower variety is the great beauty of this dimension of existence. I had a dream once where I saw a blue tinge to everything, and I knew, I felt, how the blueness was love. We couldn't see it with ordinary vision, but for dream-seeing it was there, drenching the planet, which does appear blue, as we know, from space.

At poetry readings I have said about Rumi's poetry, "Folks, this is not country music." It gets a laugh. Rumi says, Fall in love in such a way that it frees you from any connecting. That's very different from the lonely wail of: She left me, he left me; she came back; she left again. Some of his lines have been put in songs. There is a grief of separation in them, but the words come from a different region than popular lyrics. I'm not saying there's not wisdom in country songs. There is plenty. The love that Rumi and Shams move into, though, includes those dimensions and moves through them to what Sufis call the qalb. I have no synonym for that, and perhaps not much experience of it, though I met one who lives there, Bawa Muhaiyaddeen. I am no great sheikhs of a lover myself. I get mean and jealous, distracted and forgetful. It's Rumi's and Bawa's station I try to speak of, not mine. At the end of his life Ouspensky told J. G. Bennett in a letter that nothing could be found by intellectual processes, and that "there is only one hope: that we should find a way to work with the higher emotional centre." That is the work that Rumi's poetry is about.

Sufis say the heart is "the comprehensive human reality,"² and that the way of love is a path of annihilation, of the beatitude of "as though it had never been." Our original state is nonbeing, nonexistence, and we spend much of our lives trying to break free of matter, free of mind and desire, back into the deep region of being and nonbeing we are at the core. The refreshment of dreamless sleep when we are, but are not conscious, is a taste of it. We are here, then, but with no awareness of being here.

The absolute ipseity, suchness, the human reality and not the melodrama, that region of being, is described in the Heart Sutra, the central text of Zen, as having "no eyes, no ears, no nose, no tongue, no body, no mind, and no consciousness."³ To get there you must die before you die. Buddha's Heart Sutra draws one along to the understanding that in that dissolving nothing exists by itself. Everything interpenetrates in the ecstatic core where heart-vision begins.

A bowl falls from the roof. This is not theoretical. It is the practical and experiential love that annihilates, and the most ineffable of experiences, if there can be degrees of unsayableness. All of Rumi's poems may be heard as love poems. They attend the soul's flowering from grief, and from every emotion that streams through the guest house of consciousness.

The love way is not religious. It is rather the origin and the longing inside religiousness. Footprints disappear at the ocean's edge. When we bow to each other, feet become head in a circle. No one could tell with Rumi and Shams who was teacher and who the student. Lover, beloved, and love became one thing with them. Images of transparency and particles, light upon light, the candle at noon, occur, images of breath merging with sky. We are sleeping and wake inside another sleep; we wake again, and on . . . as veils, the mist of language, the apparent limits, burn off. Each region of love leads to the unfolding. There may seem to be a kind of progress to this book, from spontaneous wandering to the lord of the heart, but it might just as easily be reversed, or put in any number of sequences. The heart with its many regions moves more like interpenetrating spheres, concurrent universes, than a linear path. Areas of energy in the poetry merge with one another as layers of ocean, or as the mysterious workings of soil in a field, or the draining slant of a mountainside.

Rumi's impulse feels earthward in its transformation, going down instead of up in the way one might aspire to the angelic. There is no down or up in love, but if one had to say whether Rumi's poetry goes more with the pure transcendents or more with the grief-gardeners, one would say he's a ground-hugger and not so much a high-flyer, more jamal (feminine, receptive) than jalal (masculine, commanding). But as Rumi himself says hundreds of times, there is little one can say about love. It has to be lived, and it's always in motion.

When Rainer Maria Rilke, the great mystical poet of the twentieth century, saw the Mevlevi dervishes in Cairo in 1910, he said, "With Rumi the scale is shifted, for this is the mystery of the deeply kneeling man. In following the peculiar weight and strength in his knees, he belongs to that world in which height is depth. This is the night of radiant depth unfolded." He was referring to the night of December 17, when Rumi died in 1273. It is celebrated as his union with the divine.

A Brief Account of Rumi's Life

Rumi was born in Balkh, a small town west of Mazar-i-Sharif in Afghanistan on September 30, 1207. Fleeing the approach of Genghis Khan's Mongol armies, the family moved several times, to Waksh in what is now Tajikistan, to Samarkand, to Damascus, finally settling in Konya on the high plain of central Anatolia. Rumi's father, Bahauddin, was a highly original mystic who kept his intimations of, and promptings from, the divine in diary form. The Ma'arif was one of Rumi's most treasured texts after Bahauddin's death. He studied it with his father's former student, Burhanuddin Mahaqqiq. They also read Sanai and Attar together, and Burhan led the young Rumi on several consecutive chillas, forty-day fasting retreats. Burhan was himself an eccentric hermit majestically unconcerned with beliefs and lineages. He seems to have prepared Jelaluddin well for the galvanizing event of the young mystic's life, his meeting with Shamsi Tabriz.

In late October of 1244 Rumi was thirty-seven. Shams was twenty, maybe thirty, years older. Their meeting and subsequent sobbet (mystical conversation) generated fresh stories and ecstatic icons for the world of mystical awareness and love. Their Friendship is one of the great mysteries. Rumi's poetry is heard as continuing resonance from That. Their separation on the physical plane occurred four years later on December 5, 1248. There is disagreement now as to how Shams disappeared. Franklin Lewis claims that the rumor Shams was murdered by jealous disciples of Rumi "arrives late, circulates in oral context, and is almost certainly groundless."⁴ What we know for sure is what we have, the poems so filled with grief and ecstatic sentience. All the biographical scenarios, whichever one chooses, are without sufficient evidence to be authoritative. No matter. We can let that detective story rest awhile. We have the Shams, the Masnavi, the letters, Discourses, sermons, the Rubaiyat, a generous plenty!

After Shams's death or disappearance, Rumi lived twenty-six years tending soul growth in the dervish community around him and leaving us a prodigious legacy. He spoke the poetry spontaneously. It was taken down by scribes, and he revised it later in manuscript. Rumi was married twice; his first wife, Gowhar Khatun, died young. She bore two children, Sultan Velad and Allaedin. Rumi had two children also with his second wife, Kira Khatun: Mozaffer, a son, and Maleke, a daughter.

The central enigma of Rumi's life, of course, is Shams Tabriz, the electrifying, eccentric wanderer with the charisma of a desert wind, who knelt and prayed for a companion on his own level of attainment. A voice came, What will you give? "My head." Jelaluddin of Konya is your Friend. He said later that he came to Rumi when Rumi was ready to receive his secret. But it was observed of Rumi and Shams that one could not tell who was the teacher and who the disciple.

Thoreau went to the woods to simplify and find what was most deeply his. "I did not want to live what was not life. Living is so dear." Some sentences sear the soul free of communal and personal habits, the situation we're born within. When Shams pushes Rumi's books into the fountain at their first meeting, including his father Bahauddin's soul notes, he says, "Now you must live what you've been reading and talking about."

Rumi relinquishes his books, and he and Shams go into retreat. Rumi asks for burning. Shams says, I am fire. It is that which refines the poems to their daring intensity and courage, to their setting out into unknown regions, these heart-quadrants that are so subtle and multivalent.

Why should I seek more?

I am the same as he.

His essence speaks through me.

I have been looking for myself.

After this soul-merging with Shams, Rumi found another living friend with whom to do the heart-opening work, Saladin Zarkub the goldsmith. Saladin was an old man (the poems become more quiet and tender), and after Saladin's death, Husam Chelebi, Rumi's scribe, became the friend of his heart. They produced the six books of the Masnavi. Rumi died as the sky turned deep red at sunset on December 17, 1273. There were minor tremors, like stomach grumblings. "Patience, old earth!" Rumi called out. "You'll have your sweet morsel soon!"

1. Spontaneous Wandering

I take down my King James to look up the passage about love (charity) in 1 Corinthians 13. There is a tiny red ant living in Corinth. It walks to the top and along the gold edges. Spontaneous wandering is a favorite region of the heart. It may look like mindless drift, but it isn't. More the good Don and Sancho out for their inspired adventures, quixotic and panzaic.⁵ The ant is my teacher.

We see through a glass darkly, then face-to-face. A more polished mirror shows us who we truly are. The wandering of Rumi's poetry is a model for the soul's lovely motions. When thirst begins to look for water, water has already started out with a canteen, looking for thirst. Love feels like sliding along the eddies and currents of the tao.

Pir Vilayat Khan⁶ recently commented to me, "Your first Rumi volumes seemed very sexual." He's right. There is too much of that energy in the first work with Rumi I did, especially in some of the quatrains. I was very wet with such water at the time myself. I was thirty-nine. Now I'm sixty-five. Things change; nothing wrong with that. What's truly alive is always changing.

Gay lovers hear Rumi's poetry as gay. I don't agree, though I'm certainly guilty of previously loading Rumi's poetry with erotic fruit. I don't do that now. Rumi is way happier than sex and orgasms, his wandering more conscious and free. See "Imra'u 'l-Qays" in the next section. Rumi and Shams wander in that country.

Perhaps the purest wanderer of our time is Nanao, like Basho in his. Gary Snyder says about him,

This subtropical East China Sea carpenter and spear fisherman finds himself equally at home in the desert. So much so that on one occasion when an eminent traditional Buddhist priest boasted of his lineage, Nanao responded, "I need no lineage. I am desert rat." But for all his independence Nanao Sakaki carries the karma of Chungtzu, En-no-gyoja, Saigyō, Ikkyū, Basho, and Issa in his bundle. His work or play in the world is to pull out nails, free seized nuts, break loose the rusted, open up the shutters. You can put these poems in your shoes and walk a thousand miles.

GO WITH MUDDY FEET

When you hear dirty story
wash your ears.

When you see ugly stuff
wash your eyes.

When you get bad thoughts
wash your mind.

and

Keep your feet muddy.⁷

—Nanao Sakaki

Excuse my wandering.

How can one be orderly with this?
It's like counting leaves in a garden,

along with the song notes of partridges,
and crows. Sometimes organization and computation become absurd.

FIVE THINGS

I have five things to say,
five fingers to give into your grace.

First, when I was apart from you,
this world did not exist, nor any other.

Second, whatever I was looking for was always you.

Third, why did I ever learn to count to three?

Fourth, my cornfield is burning!

Fifth, this finger stands for Rabia,⁸ and this is for someone else.

Is there a difference?

Are these words or tears?
Is weeping speech?
What shall I do, my love?

So the lover speaks, and everyone around begins to cry with him, laughing crazily, moaning in the spreading union
of lover and beloved.

This is the true religion. All others are thrown-away bandages beside it.

This is the *sema*⁹ of slavery and mastery dancing together. This is not-being.

I know these dancers.
Day and night I sing their songs
in this phenomenal cage.

THE MANY WINES

God has given us a dark wine so potent that,
drinking it, we leave the two worlds.

God has put into the form of hashish a power to deliver the taster from self-consciousness.

God has made sleep
so that it erases every thought.

God made Majnun love Layla so much that just her dog would cause confusion in him.¹⁰

There are thousands of wines
that can take over our minds.

Don't think all ecstasies
are the same!

Jesus was lost in his love for God.
His donkey was drunk on barley.

Drink from the presence of saints,
not from those other jars.

Every object, every being,
is a jar full of delight.

Be a connoisseur,
and taste with caution.

Any wine will get you high.
Judge like a king, and choose the purest,

the ones unadulterated with fear,
or some urgency about "what's needed."

Drink the wine that moves you as a camel moves when it's been untied, and is just ambling about.

COOKED HEADS

I have been given a glass
that has the fountain of the sun inside,

a Friend in both worlds, like the fragrance of amber inside the fragrance of musk.

My soul-parrot gets excited with sweetness.
Wingbeats, a door opening in the sun.

You've seen the market where they sell cooked heads: that's what this is, a way of seeing beyond inner and outer.¹¹

A donkey wanders the sign of Taurus.

Heroes do not stay lined up in ranks for very long. I set out for Tabriz, even though my boat is anchored here.

WHERE YOU LOVE FROM

Look inside and find where a person loves from. That's the reality, not what they say.

Hypocrites

give attention to form, the right and wrong ways of professing belief.
Grow instead in universal light.

When that revealed itself, God gave it a thousand different names, the least of those sweet-breathing names being,
the one who is not in need of anyone.

You've so distracted me,
your absence fans my love.
Don't ask how.

Then you come near.
"Do not . . ." I say, and "Do not . . . ," you answer.

Don't ask why
this delights me.

In your light I learn how to love.
In your beauty, how to make poems.

You dance inside my chest
where no one sees you,

but sometimes I do,
and that sight becomes this art.

Drumsound rises on the air,
its throb, my heart.

A voice inside the beat says,
"I know you're tired,
but come, this is the way."

Are you jealous of the ocean's generosity?
Why would you refuse to give this love to anyone?

Fish don't hold the sacred liquid in cups!
They swim the huge fluid freedom.

THERE'S NOTHING AHEAD

Lovers think they're looking for each other,
but there's only one search: wandering
this world is wandering that,
both inside one transparent sky. In here there is no dogma and no heresy.

The miracle of Jesus is himself, not what he said
or did about the future. Forget the future.
I'd worship someone who could do that.

On the way you may want to look back, or not.
But if you can say, There's nothing ahead,
there will be nothing there.

Stretch your arms
and take hold the cloth of your clothes with both hands. The cure for pain is in the pain.
Good and bad are mixed. If you don't have both,
you don't belong with us.

When one of us gets lost,
is not here, he must be inside us. There's no place like that anywhere in the world.

2. Sohbet: Who You Talking To?

For Rumi the appearance of formal beauty comes as a natural response to being spoken to. The rose opens because it has heard something. The cypress grows strong and straight because a love-secret is being whispered. Elegance in language arrives in response. Before creation there was a question, "Am I not your lord?"¹² The simultaneous YES! that came is why we are here at all in the midst of three hundred billion galaxies.

I have a friend who, when she wants to know who I am seeing, who I am in love with, asks, Who you talking to? The exchange of deep friendship makes a fine entrance into love and trust, into the mysterious action that moves through the eyes, the voice, the heart.

Rumi wonders, Can you see these escapees, the ones who have gotten free of their personalities and into the truer self? He celebrates the freedom of those escapees, how their friendship dissolves into everything: what anybody says, whatever happens.

Emily Dickinson says, I dwell in possibility, a fairer house than prose. That region where her poetry grew is sohbet.

I dwell in possibility,
A fairer house than prose,
More numerous of windows,
Superior for doors.

Of chambers as the cedars,
Impregnable of eye.
And for an everlasting roof
The gambrels of the sky.

Of visitors, the fairest.
For occupation, this:
The spreading wide my narrow hands
To gather paradise.¹³

She's describing the opening air around Rumi and Shams, their retreat house full of sky and breath, and laughter with the fairest visitors. Love with no object, conversation with no subject, seeing with no image, light on light, pure possibility.

Rumi's love poems are not in the realm we're more familiar with, the earthy and sexual transcendence celebrated in the poetry of Keats and Whitman, Rexroth, Kinnell, Bly, Creeley, Jack Gilbert. Rumi's love is beyond the sexual pathway and, for that reason, maybe not so beautiful, to us. Rumi is less tranced and less sensual than, say, these lines from Rexroth's late afternoon love poem, "When We with Sappho":

Stop reading. Lean back. Give me your mouth.
Your grace is as beautiful as a sleep.

You move against me like a wave
That moves in sleep.
Your body spreads across my brain
Like a bird-filled summer;
Not like a body, not like a separate thing,
But like a nimbus that hovers
Over every other thing in all the world.¹⁴

Sufis say there are three ways of being with the mystery: prayer, then a step up from that, meditation, and a step up from that, conversation, the mystical exchange they call sobbet.

RESPONSE TO YOUR QUESTION

Why ask about behavior when you are soul-essence,
and a way of seeing into presence!

Plus you're with us!

How could you worry?

You may as well free a few words from your vocabulary.

Why and how and impossible. Open the mouth-cage
and let those fly away.

We were all born by accident, but still this wandering caravan will make camp in perfection.

Forget the nonsense categories of there and here,
race, nation, religion,

starting point and destination.

You are soul, and you are love,
not a sprite or an angel or a human being!

You're a

Godman-womanGod-manGod-Godwoman!

No more questions now
as to what it is we're doing here.

If you want what visible reality can give,
you're an employee.

If you want the unseen world,
you're not living your truth.

Both wishes are foolish,
but you'll be forgiven for forgetting that what you really want is love's confusing joy.

SPECIAL PLATES

Notice how each particle moves.
Notice how everyone has just arrived here from a journey. Notice how each wants a different food. Notice how the stars vanish as the sun comes up,
and how all streams stream toward the ocean.

Look at the chefs preparing special plates
for everyone according to what they need.
Look at this cup that can hold the ocean.
Look at those who see the face. Look through Shams's eyes into water that is entirely jewels.

YOU ARE NOT YOUR EYES

Those who have reached their arms
into emptiness are no longer concerned with lies and truth, with mind and soul,

or which side of the bed they rose from.
If you are still struggling to understand,
you are not there. You offer your soul to one who says, "Take it to the other side." You're on neither side, yet those who love you see you on one side or the other. You say Illa, "only God," then your hungry eyes see you're in "nothing," La.¹⁵ You're an artist who paints both with existence and non.

Shams could help you see who you are,
but remember, You are not your eyes.

WHAT WAS SAID TO THE ROSE

What was said to the rose that made it open
was said to me here in my chest.

What was told the cypress that made it strong and straight, what was whispered the jasmine

so it is what it is, whatever made sugarcane sweet; whatever was said to the inhabitants of the town of Chigil in Turkestan that makes them so handsome, whatever lets the pomegranate

flower blush like a human face, that is being said to me now. I blush. Whatever put eloquence in language, that's happening here. The great warehouse doors open; I fill with gratitude, chewing a piece of sugarcane, in love with the one to whom every that belongs!

THE MUSIC

For sixty years I have been forgetful, every moment, but not for a second
has this flowing toward me slowed or stopped.
I deserve nothing. Today I recognize that I am the guest the mystics talk about.
I play this living music for my host.
Everything today is for the host.

IMRA'U 'L-QAYS

Imra'u 'l-Qays,¹⁶ king of the Arabs,
was very handsome and a poet full of love songs.

Women loved him desperately. Everyone loved him, but there came one night an experience that changed him completely.

He left his kingdom and his family.
He put on dervish robes and wandered from one weather, one landscape, to another.

Love dissolved his king-self and led him to Tabuk,
where he worked for a time making bricks.

Someone told the king of Tabuk about Imra'u 'l-Qays,
and that king came to visit him at night.

"King of the Arabs, handsome Joseph of this age,
ruler of two empires, one composed of territories,
and the other of the beauty of women,

if you would consent to stay with me,
I would be honored. You abandon kingdoms, because you want more than kingdoms."

The king of Tabuk went on like this, praising Imra'u 'l-Qays and talking theology and philosophy.

Imra'u 'l-Qays kept silent.
Then suddenly he leaned and whispered something in the second king's ear, and that second king became a wild wanderer too.

They walked out of town hand in hand,
no royal belts, no thrones.

This is what love does and continues to do.
It tastes like honey to adults and milk to children.

Love is the last thirty-pound bale.
When you load it on, the boat tips over.

So they wandered around China like birds pecking at bits of grain. They rarely spoke because of the dangerous seriousness of the secret they knew.

That love-secret spoken pleasantly, or irritation,
severs a hundred thousand heads in one swing.

A love-lion grazes in the soul's pasture,
while the scimitar of this secret approaches.
It's a killing better than any living.

All that world-power wants, really,
is this weakness.

So these kings talk in low tones,
and carefully. Only God knows what they say.

They use unsayable words. Bird language.
But some people have imitated them, learned a few birdcalls, and gotten prestigious.

3. The Superabundance of Ordinary Being

Love is not love that doesn't love the details of the beloved, the minute particulars. Judith and I were in Pammukkalle, Turkey, an ancient Roman bath with a museum, and around the side, attached to it, is a shed called the Museum of Small Findings. Shards of pottery, coins, fingers and toes of statuary, just as the sign says. The guard at the door, the host, is a smiling, genial man about four-feet two-inches tall, no taller, and no pun intended. Wherever we go now we do small findings, to make sure nothing goes unnoticed, or gets left behind.

Love is the connection with spirit, and one way it flows is through form. That's the state of rapture Rumi praises, the joy of being inside an intersection with the divine, which is what this world is.

"Truly being here is glorious," says Rilke in the Seventh Duino Elegy, and in the Ninth,

Isn't it the secret intent of this taciturn earth, when it forces lovers together, that inside their boundless emotion all things may shudder with joy?

This resonant trembling of the earth with lovers, is the superabundance of being, a phrase from Rilke in Stephen Mitchell's translation.¹⁷

Rumi walks the granary amazed like an ant, small findings the given.

ZULEIKHA

Zuleikha¹⁸ let everything be the name of Joseph, from celery seed to aloes wood. She loved him so much she concealed his name in many phrases, the inner meanings known only to her.

When she said,

*The wax is softening near the fire, she meant,
My love is wanting me.*

If she said, Look, the moon is up,
or The willow has new leaves, or The coriander seeds have caught fire, or The king is in a good mood today, or Isn't that lucky, or The furniture needs dusting, or
The water carrier is here, or This bread needs more salt,
or The clouds seem to be moving against the wind,
or My head hurts, or My headache's better,
anything she praises it's Joseph's touch she means.
Any complaint, it's his being away.

When she's hungry, it's for him. Thirsty, his name is a sherbet. Cold, he's a fur. This is what the Friend can do when one is in such love.

The miracle Jesus did by being the name of God,
Zuleikha felt in the name Joseph.

When one is united to the core of another,
to speak of that is to breathe the name Hu,
empty of self and filled with love.

PUT THIS DESIGN IN YOUR CARPET

Spiritual experience is a modest woman
who looks lovingly at one man.

It's a great river where ducks live happily, and crows drown. The visible bowl of form contains food that is both nourishing and a source of heartburn.

There is an unseen presence we honor that gives the gifts.

You're water. We're the millstone.
You're wind. We're dust blown up into shapes.

You're spirit. We're the opening and closing of our hands. You're the clarity.

We're this language that tries to say it.
You're joy. We're all the different kinds of laughing. Any movement or sound is a profession of faith, as the millstone

grinding is explaining how it believes in the river! No metaphor can say this,

but I can't stop pointing to the beauty.
Every moment and place says,

"Put this design in your carpet!"

THE ROAD HOME

An ant hurries along a threshing floor
with its wheat grain, moving between huge stacks of wheat, not knowing the abundance all around. It thinks its one grain is all there is to love.

So we choose a tiny seed to be devoted to.
This body, one path or one teacher.
Look wider and farther.

The essence of every human being can see,
and what that essence-eye takes in,
the being becomes. Saturn. Solomon!

The ocean pours through a jar,
and you might say it swims inside
the fish! This mystery gives peace to your longing and makes the road home home.

THIS IS ENOUGH

Aphrodite singing gbazals. A sky with gold streaks across. A stick that finds water in stone. Jesus sitting quietly near the animals.

Night so peaceful. This is enough was always true. We just haven't seen it. The hoopoe already wears a tufted crown. Each ant is given its elegant belt at birth. This love we feel pours through us like a giveaway

song. The source of now is here!

UZAYR

Which reminds me of the sons of Uzayr,
who are out looking for their father.

They have grown old, and their father has miraculously grown young!

They meet him and ask, "Pardon us, sir,
but have you seen Uzayr? We hear that he's supposed to be coming along this road today." "Yes," says Uzayr,

"he's right behind me." One of his sons replies, "That's good news." The other falls on the ground. He has recognized his father. "What do you mean news?

We're already inside the sweetness of his presence." To the mind

there is such a thing as news, whereas to inner knowing, it's all in the middle of its happening. To doubters, this is a pain. To believers, it's gospel.

To the lover and the visionary,
it's life as it's being lived.

Out of nowhere a horse

brought us here where we taste love until we don't exist again. This taste is the wine we always mention.

AMAZED MOUTH

The soul: a wide listening sky
with thousands of candles.

When anything is sold, soul gets given in the cash: people waiting at a door,

a ladder leaning on a roof, someone climbing down. The market square bright with understanding. Listening opens its amazed mouth.

Birdsong, wind,
the water's face.

Each flower, remembering the smell:
I know you're close by.

BEGIN

This is now. Now is. Don't postpone till then. Spend the spark of iron on stone. Sit at the head of the table.

Dip your spoon in the bowl. Seat yourself

next to your joy and have your awakened soul pour wine. Branches in the spring wind, easy dance of jasmine and cypress. Cloth for green robes has been cut from pure absence. You're the tailor, settled among his shop goods, quietly sewing.

4. Sudden Wholeness

In this love kingdom there's a windy blowing open of windows. Spring! Sounds of talking sprout. There's a picnic by the river. Identity is music, and poems are rough notations of the melodies.

This station gives the lover glimpses of a spirit-wholeness running through the apparent chaos, a rightness that weaves a pattern the lover sees in the dissonant and daily.

Here is the auspicious beginning. Kindness stands in the door. You walk out together like the Zen master Basho moving around Kyoto, pining for Kyoto. The phenomenal and the numinous grow identical. The world you see, together with the poem, both are intensely alive inside each other with revelation and suchness. That's the feeling in this region: continuous seasonal epiphany, grief, elation, whimsy.

Samurai talk — tang of horse radish.

You, the butterfly —
I, Chuang Tzu's
dreaming heart.

Even in Kyoto — hearing the cuckoo's cry —
I long for Kyoto.¹⁹

THIS MARKET

Can you find another market like this?
Where, with your one rose

you can buy hundreds of rose gardens?
Where, for one seed you get a whole wilderness? For one weak breath, the divine wind?

THE MUSIC WE ARE

Did you hear that winter's over?
The basil and the carnations cannot control their laughter.

The nightingale, back from his wandering,

has been made singing master over all the birds. The trees reach out their congratulations. The soul goes dancing through the king's doorway.

Anemones blush because they have seen the rose naked. Spring, the only fair judge, walks in the courtroom, and several December thieves steal away.

Last year's miracles will soon be forgotten. New creatures whirl in from nonexistence, galaxies scattered around their feet. Have you met them?

Do you hear the bud of Jesus crooning in the cradle? A single narcissus flower has been appointed Inspector of Kingdoms. A feast is set. Listen.

The wind is pouring wine! Love used to hide inside images. No more!

The orchard hangs out its lanterns.
The dead come stumbling by in shrouds.

Nothing can stay bound or be imprisoned.
You say, "End this poem here and wait for what's next." I will. Poems are rough notations for the music we are.

WALNUTS

Philosophers have said that we love music
because it resembles the sphere-sounds of union. We've been part of a harmony before, so these moments of treble and bass keep our remembering fresh. But how does this happen within these dense bodies

full of forgetfulness and doubt and grieving? It's like water passing through us.

It becomes acidic and bitter, but still as urine it retains watery qualities.

It will put out a fire! So there is this music flowing through our bodies that can dowse restlessness. Hearing the sound, we gather strength. Love kindles with melody. Music feeds a lover composure, and provides form for the imagination. Music breathes on personal fire and makes it keener.

The waterhole is deep. A thirsty man climbs

a walnut tree growing next to the pool and drops walnuts one by one into the beautiful place. He listens carefully to the sound as they hit and watches

the bubbles. A more rational man gives advice,
"You'll regret doing this. You're so far from the water that by the time you get down to gather walnuts, the water will have carried them away." He replies, "I'm not here for walnuts, I want the music

they make when they hit."

You that come to birth and bring the mysteries,
your voice-thunder makes us very happy.

Roar, lion of the heart,
and tear me open!

NO BETTER GIFT

When the ocean comes to you as a lover,
marry, at once, quickly,
for God's sake!

Don't postpone it!
Existence has no better gift.

No amount of searching will find this.

A perfect falcon, for no reason,
has landed on your shoulder,
and become yours.

This moment this love comes to rest in me,
many beings in one being.
In one wheat grain a thousand sheaf stacks.
Inside the needle's eye, a turning night of stars.

The clear bead at the center changes everything.
There are no edges to my loving now.

You've heard it said there's a window that opens from one mind to another,

but if there's no wall, there's no need for fitting the window, or the latch.

A thousand half-loves
must be forsaken to take one whole heart home.

PATTERN

When love itself comes to kiss you, don't hold back! When the king goes hunting, the forest smiles. Now the king has become the place and all the players, prey,

bystander, bow, arrow, hand and release.
How does that feel? Last night's dream enters these open eyes. We sometimes make spiderwebs of smoke and saliva, fragile thought-packets. Leave thinking to the one who gave intelligence. Stop weaving, and watch how the pattern improves.

AUCTION

As elephants remember India
perfectly, as mind dissolves,
as song begins, as the glass fills, wind rising, a roomful of conversation, a sanctuary of prostration, a bird lights on my hand in this day born of friends, an ocean covering everything, all roads opening,
a person changing to kindness,
no one reasonable, religious jargon forgotten, and Saladin
there raising his hand to bid on the bedraggled boy Joseph!

5. Escaping into Silence

Close the language-door (the mouth). Open the love-window (the eyes). The moon (the reflected light of the divine) won't use the door, only the window. Moving into silence with a friend, and with what comes through the eyes and both presences then, we may become those escapees Rumi calls those who associate in the heart.

Rumi celebrates this wild freedom, and as he does, he may seem to be subverting scripture with his advocacy of the nonverbal, but he's actually trying to make the revelation that comes in language more experiential. I recommend we all try a day of silence with someone. Just one day!

QUIETNESS

Inside this new love, die.
Your way begins on the other side.
Become the sky.
Take an ax to the prison wall.
Escape. Walk out like someone suddenly born into color.
Do it now.
You're covered with thick cloud.
Slide out the side. Die, and be quiet. Quietness is the surest sign that you've died.
Your old life was a frantic running from silence.

The speechless full moon comes out now.

SOME KISS WE WANT

There is some kiss we want
with our whole lives, the touch of spirit on the body. Seawater begs the pearl to break its shell.

And the lily, how passionately
it needs some wild darling!

At night, I open the window and ask the moon to come and press its face against mine.

Breathe into me. Close the language-door and open the love-window.
The moon won't use the door,
only the window.

THE WATERWHEEL

Stay together, friends.
Don't scatter and sleep.

Our friendship is made of being awake.

The waterwheel accepts water
and turns and gives it away, weeping.

That way it stays in the garden,
whereas another roundness rolls through a dry riverbed looking for what it thinks it wants.

Stay here, quivering with each moment
like a drop of mercury.

BLESSING THE MARRIAGE

This marriage be wine with halvah,
honey dissolving in milk.

This marriage be the leaves and fruit of a date tree. This marriage be women laughing together for days on end. This marriage, a sign for us to study. This marriage, beauty. This marriage, a moon in a light blue sky. This marriage, this silence, fully mixed with spirit.

TWO DAYS OF SILENCE

After days of feasting, fast.
After days of sleeping, stay awake
one night. After these times of bitter storytelling, joking, and serious considerations, we should give ourselves
two days between layers of baklava
in the quiet seclusion where soul sweetens and thrives more than with language.

I hear nothing in my ear but your voice.
Heart has plundered mind of its eloquence.

Love writes a transparent calligraphy, so on the empty page my soul can read and recollect.

Which is worth more, a crowd of thousands,
or your own genuine solitude?
Freedom, or power over an entire nation?

A little while alone in your room will prove more valuable than anything else that could ever be given you.

PASSAGE INTO SILENCE

The essence of darkness is light,
as oil is the essence of this light.

You are the origin of all jasmine, narcissi,
and irises to come.

You are sunlight moving through the houses, David's hand molding smooth chainmail,

September moon
over the unharvested crop. You set the grain in the husk.

A rose torn open, my head
not worrying about debt, you,

soul and body
mortared together in bed,

you saying,
you are, you are,

then stopping to twist the strings
to sweeten the voice.

When I give this body to the ground, you will find another way.

These words are an alternate existence. Hear the passage into silence and be that.

6. A New Life

As one becomes a lover, duties change to inspirations. Practices become dance, poetry, creek music moving along. Impossible natural images of transformation appear: candle becomes moth; a dry, broken stick breaks into bud. A chick-pea becomes its cook (not so impossible, the natural tasting!). Something enters that spontaneously enjoys itself. Finding a purpose for acting is no longer the problem. The soul is here for its own joy. Eyes are meant to see things. It's by some grand shift of energy that we know love.

We have this great love-ache for the ocean and the seabirds sewing the hem of her robe. That is the subject here. We long for beauty, even as we swim within it. Abdul Qadir Gilani describes this region of the heart as a baby. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen also speaks of it this way. Someone asked Bawa once what it felt like to be him. He answered by closing his eyes and making little kissing noises like a baby nursing. In this new life a baby is born in the heart. Purity comes and a playfulness, an ease, a peace. Gilani says this new heart-baby sometimes talks to the soul in dreams.²⁰ Bawa says that this baby knows the language of God. It understands every voice that floats on the wind because it is in unity and compassion.²¹ This baby has none of the exclusivity of loving, the limits we learn and later, hopefully, unlearn from our families (the blood ties), our culture, religion, tribe, and nation. Bawa says humanity is "God's funny family." That's how the baby sees.

I saw this baby come into my father's eyes in the last weeks of his life in 1971. Everyone felt it. My mother died (she was sixty-four, lung cancer) on May 8, 1971. My dad died of a stroke on July 2, 1971, at seventy-two. In the time between (fifty-five days), Dad lost all judgmental tendencies. He met everyone with unconditional love. He would go out on any excuse to walk around and talk with strangers. He had unlimited time and attention and helpfulness for everyone. So beautiful. I see that opening in John Seawright's mother and father too. To hear Rev. Ryan Seawright pray outdoors in the wind at a June wedding, as I did recently, is about as much as a heart can stand. Bawa used to go out rounding, which meant riding in the passenger's seat of a car driving very slow and waving to people walking on the sidewalk. Sometimes I'd go along. When pedestrians would see his face, it was like they were struck full-power with one of those old searchlights from Second World War airfields. Then they'd recover and wave so tenderly, as to a baby.

The connecting extends to all living beings. My friend Stephan Schwartz tells of an old farmhand who could stand at the edge of a field and speak in a soft voice to a particular cow a couple of hundred yards away, "Number forty-seven." That cow, who needed attention from a vet, would detach from the herd and walk over. Pleasant (the man's name) would talk to the cow, looking in her face, about what needed to be done, how it would hurt but that it was for the best. The cow would then patiently endure what needed to be done, and he'd say, "That's good. Go on back now." Then he'd call another one, "Number twenty-four." Stephan swears that he was present many times when this happened.

Bawa went into the jungles of Sri Lanka for fifty years to watch the animals and learn about God. When your heart dissolves in this love, books are beside the point. We learn from the taste of life events. Jelaluddin Chelebi once asked me what religion I was. I threw up my hands in the who knows gesture. "Good," he said. "Love is the religion, and the universe is the book."

ESCAPING TO THE FOREST

Some souls have gotten free of their bodies.
Do you see them? Open your eyes for those who escape to meet with other escapees, whose hearts associate in a way they have

of leaving their false selves to live in a truer self.

I don't mind if my companions wander away for a while.

They will come back like a smiling drunk.
The thirsty ones die of their thirst.

The nightingale sometimes flies from a garden
to sing in the forest.

Love comes sailing through and I scream.

Love sits beside me like a private supply of itself.

Love puts away the instruments and takes off the silk robes. Our nakedness together changes me completely.

ANY CHANCE MEETING

In every gathering, in any chance meeting
on the street, there is a shine, an elegance rising up. Today I recognized that that jewel-like beauty is the presence, our loving confusion, the glow in which watery clay gets brighter than fire, the one we call the Friend.

NASUH'S CHANGING

At that moment his spirit grows wings and lifts.
His ego falls like a battered wall.
He unites with God, alive,
but emptied of Nasuh.

His ship sinks and in its place move the ocean waves.
His body's disgrace, like a falcon's loosened binding, slips from the falcon's foot.

His stones drink in water. His field shines like satin with gold threads in it. Someone dead a hundred years steps out strong and handsome.
A broken stick breaks into bud.²²

If you love love,
look for yourself.

What I say makes me drunk.

Nightingale, iris, parrot, jasmine,

I speak those languages, along with the idiom of my longing for Shamsi Tabriz.

THE CIRCLE

Is there anything better than selling figs
to the fig seller?

That's how this is.

Making a profit is not why we're here,
nor pleasure, nor even joy.

When someone is a goldsmith, wherever he goes, he asks for the goldsmith.

The clouds build with what we share.

Wheat stays wheat right through the threshing.

How just do you feel when you load a lame donkey?
The world has some share in this cup.
That's how it turns green.

Let the lean
and wounded be revived in your garden.

How would the soul feel in the beloved's river?

Fish washed free and clean of fear.
You drive us away, but we return like pet pigeons.

Ten nights becoming dawn flow in us as a new kind of waking.

Shahabuddin

Osmond joins the circle! We will say the poem again so he can play.

There is no end to anything round.

7. Grief

The deeper the grief, the more radiant the love. We miss our friend. Lovers' tears are the true wealth. My friend John Seawright used to say that the real tragedy is when you don't feel much of anything when someone dies. That lack of grieving, the feel of not to feel it,²³ is not heard much in Rumi.

I recently saw Fierce Grace, about Ram Dass's life and particularly the stroke. The movie focuses on the use of the starkest tragedies, not just his, to open the heart and help us find the vital core of consciousness, the soul. My favorite part is Ram Dass near the end saying yummyyummyyummy when he hears a young woman tell her dream of her lover who has been murdered in Colombia. Several months after her lover's death she has the first dream in which he has appeared. She yells at him, "Where have you been!" He says, Listen. The love we had was wonderful, but that is small peanuts to what's ahead for you, and when that love comes, I'll be part of it.

Ram Dass ecstatically tastes the truth of what the dead lover says. No sticky possessiveness, no hanging on to the past. Grief opens us to more love, and the new love builds with the former, and there's miraculous expansion. It's a rare movie that gives off the fragrance of enlightened love. This one does.

THE DEATH OF SALADIN

You left ground and sky weeping,²⁴ mind and soul full of grief.

No one can take your place in existence
or in absence. Both mourn, the angels, the prophets, and this sadness
I feel has taken from me the taste of language,

so that I can't say the flavor of my being apart. The roof of the kingdom within has collapsed!

When I say the word you, I mean a hundred universes.

Pouring grief of water, or secret dripping
in the heart, eyes in the head or eyes of the soul, I saw yesterday that all these flow out to find you when you're not here.

That bright fire bird Saladin went like an arrow, and now the bow trembles and sobs.

If you know how to weep for human beings,
weep for Saladin.

BIRDWINGS

Your grief for what you've lost lifts a mirror
up to where you're bravely working.

Expecting the worst, you look, and instead,
here's the joyful face you've been wanting to see.

Your hand opens and closes and opens and closes.
If it were always a fist or always stretched open,
you would be paralyzed.

Your deepest presence is in every small contracting and expanding, the two as beautifully balanced and coordinated as birdwings.

THE SILENT ARTICULATION OF A FACE

Love comes with a knife, not some shy question, and not with fears for its reputation! I say these things disinterestedly. Accept them in kind. Love is a madman, working his wild schemes, tearing off his clothes,

running through the mountains, drinking poison,
and now quietly choosing annihilation.

A tiny spider tries to wrap an enormous wasp.
Think of the spiderweb woven across the cave
where Muhammad slept! There are love stories, and there is obliteration into love.

You've been walking the ocean's edge,
holding up your robes to keep them dry.

You must dive naked under and deeper under,
a thousand times deeper! Love flows down.

The ground submits to the sky and suffers what comes. Tell me, is the earth worse for giving in like that?

Don't put blankets over the drum!
Open completely. Let your spirit-ear listen to the green dome's passionate murmur.

Let the cords of your robe be untied.
Shiver in this new love beyond all above and below. The sun rises, but which way does night go? I have no more words.

Let soul speak with the silent articulation of a face.

THE ALLURE OF LOVE

Someone who does not run toward the allure of love walks
a road where nothing lives.

But this dove here senses
the love-hawk floating above and waits and will not be driven or scared to safety.

SKY-CIRCLES

The way of love is not a subtle argument.

The door there is devastation.

Birds make great sky-circles of their freedom.

How do they learn that?
They fall, and falling,
they're given wings.

I THROW IT ALL AWAY

You play with the great globe of union,
you that see everyone so clearly and cannot be seen. Even universal intelligence gets blurry when it thinks you may leave. You came here alone, but you create hundreds of new worlds.

Spring is a peacock flirting with revelation. The rose gardens flame.
Ocean enters the boat. I throw it all away, except this love for Shams.

YOUR FACE

You may be planning departure, as a human soul
leaves the world taking almost all its sweetness with it. You saddle your horse.

You must be going. Remember you have friends here as faithful as grass and sky.

Have I failed you? Possibly you're angry. But remember our nights of conversation, the well work, yellow roses by ocean,

the longing, the archangel Gabriel saying So be it. Shamsi Tabriz, your face, is what every religion tries to remember.

I've broken through to longing now,
filled with a grief I have felt before,
but never like this.

The center leads to love.
Soul opens the creation core.

Hold on to your particular pain.
That too can take you to God.

My work is to carry this love
as comfort for those who long for you, to go everywhere you've walked and gaze at the pressed-down dirt.

Pale sunlight,
pale the wall.

Love moves away.
The light changes.

I need more grace
than I thought.

THE PURPOSE OF EMOTION

A certain Sufi tore his robe in grief,
and the tearing brought such relief he gave the robe
the name faraji, which means ripped open,

*or happiness, or one who brings the joy
of being opened.* It comes from the stem faraj,
which also refers to the genitals, male and female.

His teacher understood the purity of the action,
while others just saw the ragged appearance.

If you want peace and purity, tear away
the coverings! This is the purpose of emotion, to let a streaming beauty flow through you.

Call it spirit, elixir, or the original agreement between yourself and God. Opening into that gives peace, a song of being empty, pure silence.

The ground's generosity takes in our compost
and grows beauty. Try to be more like the ground.

Give back better, as rough clods return
an ear of corn, a tassel, a barley awn, this sleek handful of oats.

8. Tavern Madness

There is an overwhelming contact with the divine called drunkenness. The tavern is a place of shared mystical experience as opposed to the church with its tradition of received, and sometimes unquestioned, belief (though churches can sometimes turn into taverns). The tavern is an excited region where one is out of one's mind, with others. The wine there is not an Australian merlot, but the shared sense of presence flowing through. The top of one's head blows. Majnun, the mad lover, sees Layla's dog and faints.

The tavern is no place one can live. Go to night prayers, then home. It is a state of stunned surrender that will eventually be left behind for the clarity of dawn. The tavern mystic must go "beyond the drunkenness of God's overwhelming and come to the clarity of sobriety, where contemplation is restored."²⁵ In the tavern one is absent and present at the same time. Junnaiyd says there is a sobriety that contains all drunkenness, but there is no drunkenness that contains all sobriety. In this region there's flailing about, sudden insight, physical danger, and miscommunication. Move, make a mistake. Checkmate. And the veils become fascinating here with their woven designs, the tapestries depicting long passionate stories about the hurt of separation, the consuming intensity of desire, love in the Western world.

Thich Nhat Hanh tells a wonderful story in his commentaries on the Buddha's Heart Sutra about how the opposites of good and evil only seem to oppose each other. He shows how they are actually great buddies who meet in the heart's tavern.

One day Buddha was in his cave, and Ananda, Buddha's assistant, was standing near the entrance. Suddenly he saw Mara, the evil one, coming. Mara walked straight to Ananda and told him to announce his visit to Buddha.

Ananda said, "Why have you come here? You were defeated by Buddha under the Bodhi tree. Go away! You are his enemy!"

Mara began to laugh. "Did you say that your teacher has told you that he has enemies?" That made Ananda very embarrassed. He went in to announce Mara to Buddha.

"Is it true? Is he really here?" Buddha went out in person to greet Mara. He bowed and took his hands in the warmest way. "How have you been? Is everything all right?"

After they sat down to tea, Mara said, "Things are not going well at all. I am tired of being a Mara. You have to talk in riddles, and if you do anything, you have to be tricky and look evil. I'm tired of all that. But the worst part is my disciples. Now they are talking about social justice, peace, equality, liberation, nonduality, nonviolence, all that. It would be better if I hand them all over to you. I want to be something else."

Buddha listened with compassion. "Do you think it's fun being a Buddha? My disciples put words in my mouth that I never said. They build garish temples. They package my teachings as items for commerce. Mara, you don't really want to be a Buddha!"²⁶

Ananda continued to be puzzled and amazed by their conversation. The beautiful wholeness of it cannot be accepted by the mind.

I am a glass of wine with dark sediment.

I pour it all in the river.

Love says to me, "Good, but you don't see your own beauty. I am the wind that mixes in your fire, who stirs and brightens, then makes you gutter out."

SMOKE

Don't listen to anything I say.

I must enter the center of the fire.

Fire is my child, but I must be consumed and become fire.

Why is there crackling and smoke?
Because the firewood and the flames are still talking about each other.

"You are too dense. Go away!"

"You are too wavering.
I have solid form."

In the blackness those friends keep arguing.
Like a wanderer with no face.
Like the most powerful bird in existence
sitting on its perch, refusing to move.

I'M NOT SAYING THIS RIGHT

You bind me, and I tear away in a rage
to open out into air, a round brightness, a candlepoint,
all reason, all love.

This confusing joy, your doing,
this hangover, your tender thorn.

You turn to look, I turn.
I'm not saying this right.

I am a jailed crazy who ties up spirit-women.
I am Solomon.

What goes comes back. Come back.
We never left each other.

A disbeliever hides disbelief,
but I will say his secret.

More and more awake, getting up at night,
spinning and falling in love with Shams.

WHO SAYS WORDS WITH MY MOUTH?

Who looks out with my eyes? What is the soul? I cannot stop asking.

If I could taste one sip of an answer,
I could break out of this prison for drunks.

I didn't come here of my own accord,
and I can't leave that way.

Whoever brought me here will have to take me home.

This poetry. I never know what I'm going to say.
I don't plan it.
When I'm outside the saying of it,
I get very quiet and rarely speak at all.

We have a huge barrel of wine, but no cups.
That's fine with us. Every morning
we glow and in the evening we glow again.

They say there's no future for us. They're right.
Which is fine with us.

Real value comes with madness,
*matzoob*²⁷ below, scientist above.

Whoever finds love
beneath hurt and grief

disappears into emptiness with a thousand new disguises.

A CAP TO WEAR IN BOTH WORLDS

There is a passion in me that doesn't
long for anything from another human being.

I was given something else, a cap to wear
in both worlds. It fell off. No matter.

One morning I went to a place beyond dawn.
A source of sweetness that flows and is never less. I have been shown a beauty that would confuse both worlds,

but I won't cause that uproar. I am nothing but a head set on the ground
as a gift for Shams.

Midnight, but your forehead shines with dawn. You dance as you come to me and curl by curl undo the dark. Let jealousy end.

There's a strange frenzy in my head,
of birds flying,
each particle circulating on its own.
Is the one I love everywhere?

FRINGE

You wreck my shop and my house and now my heart,
but how can I run from what gives me life?

I'm weary of personal worrying, in love with the art of madness! Tear open my shame and show the mystery. How much longer do I have to fret with self-restraint and fear?

Friends, this is how it is: we are fringe sewn inside the lining of a robe. Soon we'll be loosened, the binding threads torn out. The beloved is a lion. We're the lame deer in his paws. Consider what choices we have!

Drunks fear the police,
but the police are drunk too.

People in this town, we love them
both like different chess pieces.

THE ACHE AND CONFUSION

Near the end you saw rose and thorn together,
evening and morning light commingling.

You have broken many shapes and stirred their colors into the mud.

Now you sit in a garden not doing a thing, smiling. You have felt the ache and confusion of a hangover, yet

you take again the wine that's handed you.

Let the lover be disgraceful, crazy,
absentminded. Someone sober will worry about things going badly.
Let the lover be.

WONDER WITHOUT WILLPOWER

Love's way becomes a pen sometimes writing g-sounds like gold or r-sounds like tomorrow in different calligraphy styles sliding by, darkening the paper.

Now it's held upside down, now beside the head, now down and on to something else, figuring. One sentence saves an illustrious man from disaster, but fame does not matter to the split tongue of a pen. Hippocrates knows how the cure must go. His pen does not. This one I am calling pen, or sometimes flag,

has no mind. You, the pen, are most sanely insane. You cannot be spoken of rationally.

Opposites are drawn into your presence but not to be resolved. You are not whole or ever complete. You are the wonder without willpower going where you want.

9. Absence

Love as a way into God is wild and bewildering. Union! Absence! What do these words mean? Attar says if you want to learn the secrets of love that your soul can know, "You will sacrifice everything. You will lose what you have considered valuable, but eventually you'll hear the voice you've most wanted to hear saying, Yes. Come in."

Another Sufi, Junnaiyd, recommends that we JUMP! "Plunge headfirst into the ocean of your loving. Then look around patiently for the pearl that is yours."²⁸ This heart-region is a vast emptiness. Nevit Ergin calls it absence. Rumi explores the images of a desert night, an empty pot, a house with a broken door, the weaning of a child, the flute before breath comes through. When his friend Saladin dies, Rumi says, The roof of the kingdom within has collapsed, and I can no longer taste the flavor of my being apart.

Lee Marvin in Paint Your Wagon: "I'm an ex-citizen of nowhere, and sometimes I get homesick." At the end of our loving is a depth of absence that's tremendously familiar. A high desert plain. But really there is no end to love's unfolding, and no one can tell you how yours should or will go. The troubadours and Romeo and Juliet, Anthony and Cleopatra, Anna Karenina, Jude the Obscure, Lorca's love poems, Millay's, they all have wisdom for the various stages of love's progress. Rumi, Hafez, and Emily Dickinson have ideas and images for the annihilation of absence.

The Infinite a sudden Guest Has been assumed to be
But how can that stupendous come
Which never went away?²⁹

Some people entertain this guest in specific physical form for a certain amount of time. Be grateful for such a chance, but remember, everyone has in them the great love that Rumi's poetry comes out of. It is the given that never goes away.

You are an ocean in a drop of dew,
all the universes in a thin sack of blood! What are these pleasures then, these joys, these worlds,

that you keep reaching for, hoping they will make you more alive?³⁰

LIKE LIGHT OVER THIS PLAIN

A moth flying into the flame says
with its wingfire, Try this.

The wick with its knotted neck broken tells you the same. A candle as it diminishes explains, Gathering more and more is not the way. Burn, become light and beat and help. Melt.

The ocean sits in the sand letting its lap fill with pearls and shells, then empty.
A bittersalt taste hums, This.

The phoenix gives up on good-and-bad, flies to rest on Mount Qaf, no more burning and rising from ash. It sends out one message.

The rose purifies its face, drops the soft petals,
shows its thorn, and points.

Wine abandons thousands of famous names,
the vintage years and delightful bouquets,
to run wild and anonymous through your brain.

The flute closes its eyes and gives its lips
to Hamza's emptiness.

Everything begs with the silent rocks for you to be flung out like light over this plain,
the presence of Shams.

CANDLELIGHT BECOMES MOTH

Inside a lover's heart there's another world,
and yet another.

Inside the Friend of this community
of lovers, an ear that interprets mystery,
a vein of silver in the ground, and another sky!

Intellect and compassion are ladders we climb,
and there are other ladders as we walk
the night hearing a voice that talks of forgiveness.

Inside Shams's universe candlelight itself becomes a moth to die in his candle.

THE BASKET OF FRESH BREAD

If you want to learn theory,
talk with theoreticians. That way is oral.

When you learn a craft, practice it.
That learning comes through the hands.

If you want dervishhood, spiritual poverty and emptiness, you must be friends with a teacher.

Talking about it, reading books, and doing practices
don't help. Soul receives from soul that knowing.

The mystery of absence
may be living in your pilgrim heart, and yet the knowing of it may not yet be yours.

Wait for the illuminated openness,
as though your chest were filling with light,
as when God said,

Did we not expand you? (Qur'an 57:4)

Don't look for it outside yourself.
You are the source of milk. Don't milk others!

There is a fountain inside you.
Don't walk around with an empty bucket.

You have a channel into the ocean,
yet you ask for water from a little pool.

Beg for the love expansion. Meditate only on THAT. The Qur'an says,

And he is with you. (57:4)

There is a basket of fresh bread on your head,
yet you go door to door asking for crusts.

Knock on the inner door, no other.
Sloshing knee-deep in fresh riverwater,
yet you keep asking for other people's waterbags.

Water is everywhere around you, but you see only barriers that keep you from water.

The horse is beneath the rider's thighs,
and still you ask, "Where's my horse?"

Right there,

under you!

Yes, this is a horse, but where's the horse?

Can't you see?

"Yes I can see, but whoever saw such a horse?"

Mad with thirst, you can't drink from the stream running close by your face. You are like a pearl on the deep bottom wondering inside the shell, Where's the ocean?

Those mental questionings
form the barrier.

Stay bewildered inside God,
and only that.

When you are with everyone but me,

you're with no one.

When you are with no one but me,

you're with everyone.

Instead of being so bound up with everyone,

be everyone.

When you become that many, you're nothing.

Empty.

THIS TORTURE

Why should we tell you our love stories
when you spill them together like blood in the dirt?

Love is a pearl lost on the ocean floor,
or a fire we can't see,

but how does saying that push us through the top of the head into the light above the head?

Love is not an iron pot, so this boiling energy won't help.

Soul, heart, self.
Beyond and within those
is one saying,

*How long before
I'm free of this torture!*

10. Animal Energies

Any love: earth-love, spirit, the way of a man with a maid, the way of a dog with almost anybody, the way of a hawk with the wind, of a swan with a pond, of grandparents with grandchildren, of an ant with a grain of corn, of a lion with a gazelle, all the natural drawings-together lead eventually to annihilation. This is the mystery of the animal energies. Rumi says, astonishingly, "God lives between a human being and the object of his desire" (Discourse No. 44). This is radical theology to this day, when major crises have roots in sexual repression—the Catholic pedophile priestly boys; the Muslim enraged-at-women, dismayed-by-Western-ease-with-impurity vandals. We Americans have our own deadly-to-life versions of denying the horny animal energies. We lie a lot. We avoid the intimacy of truth. We make nice, blind to our own rage. When we start bombing, we overdo it and never consider the tremendous collateral damage as another form of terrorism. Very different, but still a terror.

I like to think of the first mystical poem as that figure incised, and painted, into the farthest wall of the cave called Les Trois Freres in southern France. The Animal. Joseph Campbell called him "god of the cave." He does the dance of human and animal at once, owl, lion, horse, stag, man. He incorporates them all visually and looks out at you with your own menagerie, who have gone inward far enough to meet his gaze. Animals can live inside the landscape without our noisy self-consciousness. When we turn and go with them as Whitman did, we enter a silence and a transcendence. We perceive through their eyes with their energies. This is a metaphor, a tremendously important one, as well as an experience.

Hazrat Inayat Khan says that seekers should "accomplish their desires that they may thus be able to rise above them to the eternal goal."³¹ At the core of each person's nature are unique seeds of desiring, which flourish through the development of personality, not through any suppression of it. We are not to become pale renunciate ciphers with no wantings. The animals of desiring, the rooster of lust, the duck of urgency, the horse of passion, the peacock of wanting recognition, the crow of acquiring things, the lion of majesty, the zebra of absence (I made that one up), these are not to be thwarted but lived, transmuted, and incorporated. This is the art of forming a personality. Only when we live the animal powers do we learn that those satisfactions are not what we truly wanted. There's more, and we are here to follow the mysteries of longing beyond where they lead. The purpose of desire is to perfect the longings, for at the core of longing is the Friend, Christ, Krishna, the emptiness, wherever it was that Igjargajuk, the Eskimo shaman, was when he came back from forty nights on the ice floes with one sentence, "There is nothing to fear in the universe." The great love at the center of longing has no fear in it.

There is a witness who watches the obstreperous play of flame and eros and says, This is the dance of existence. A great mutual embrace is always happening between the eternal and what dies, between essence and accident. We are all writing the book of love. Everything goes in. All the particles of the world are in love and looking for lovers. Pieces of straw tremble in the presence of amber. Isn't that the deal? We're here to love each other, to deepen and unfold that capacity, to open the heart. And that means living in the witness, I'm beginning to see.

Hearing Rumi's poetry helps. He would say, though, that poetry can be dangerous, especially beautiful poetry, because it gives the illusion of having had the experience without actually going through it. He would periodically swear off the stuff. No more God poems, I want the presence. No more love poems, I want to be love.

This region of animal energies is where sexuality enters love's book most obviously, although eros, as Freud showed, is a powerful ingredient in many motions that draw us. Sex is as basic and nourishing to human beings as baking bread. Rumi implies as much in the heroic simile of the breadmaking poem. Lovemaking is going on everywhere among the forms, and in a startling variation of the golden rule he says, Remember, the way you make love is the way God will be with you.

Once in an informal moment (there were many) talking to a young couple about their love life, my teacher spoke to the young man, "You have seen the bull, how he goes and licks the cow before he mounts her. This is good. We can learn much from the animals." With me he counseled not cunnilingus so much as restraint. It always tickled him that my name was Barks. "The dog of desire," he would begin, "we can learn from that one, but we must not let him lead us all over town, pulling to sniff a piece of garbage, to a place where another dog has urinated, then to roll on a dead fish. He will drag us around like this if we let him; he will take over our lives. We must discipline this dog and sometimes tie him up in the backyard and give him only scraps." He had my number. Do not neglect the licking, though, is still my bullish theme.

Interesting in this regard are the names that Bawa Muhaiyaddeen had for three illusion-making capacities of human sexuality: Suran, the enjoyment of the images that come to one's mind at the moment of orgasm. Singhan, the arrogance experienced in that same moment, associated with karma and with the qualities of the lion. Taraban, the pathway of attraction that leads to the sexual act; it is associated with the birth canal or vagina. The three powers are thought of as sons of Maya. It is fascinating that there are these ancient Tamil words for mental processes we have barely noticed in the West, the first two, at least.

Note. The reference above to "priesty boys" and "Muslim vandals" is very un-Bawa. Snide, divisive, pleased-with-its-clever-self remarks will probably not help bring us into one loving family.

Think that you're gliding out from the face of a cliff
like an eagle. Think you're walking like a tiger walks by himself in the forest.

You're most handsome when you're after food.

THE PUBLIC BATH

Imagine the phenomenal world as a furnace heating water for the public bath.

Some people carry baskets of dung to keep the furnace going. Call them materialists, energetic, fire-stoking citizens.

One of those brags how he's collected and carried twenty dung baskets today, while his friend has brought six!

They think the counting up at nightfall is where truth lies. They love the smoke smell of dried dung, and how it blazes up like gold!

If you give them musk or any fragrance of soul intelligence, they find it unpleasant and turn away. Others sit in the hot bathwater and get clean. They use the world differently.

They love the feel of purity, and they have dust marks on their foreheads from bowing down.

They are separated by a wall from those who feed the fires, busy in the boiler room belittling each other. Sometimes, though,
one of those leaves the furnace,
takes off the burnt smelling rags,
and sits in the cleansing water.

The mystery is how the obsessions of furnace stokers keep the bathwater
of the others simmering perfectly.

They seem opposed, but they're necessary to each other's work: the proud piling up of fire worship, the humble disrobing
and emptying out of purification.

As the sun dries wet dung to make it ready to heat water, so dazzling sparks fly from the burning filth.

MASHALLAH

There's someone swaying by your side,
lips that say Mashallah, Mashallah.

Wonderful. God inside attraction.
A spring no one knew of wells up on the valley floor.

Lights inside a tent lovers move toward.
The refuse of Damascus gets turned over in the sun. Be like that yourself.

Say mercy, mercy to the one who guides
your soul, who keeps time.

Move, make a mistake, look up. Checkmate.

SPIRIT AND BODY

Don't feed both sides of yourself equally.
The spirit and the body carry different loads and require different attentions.

Too often
we put saddlebags on Jesus and let the donkey run loose in the pasture.

Don't make the body do what the spirit does best, and don't put a big load on the spirit that the body could easily carry.

BREADMAKING

There was a feast. The king was in his cups.
He saw a learned scholar walking by.

"Bring him in and give him some of this fine wine."

Servants rushed out and brought the man to the king's table, but he was not receptive.

"I had rather drink poison! Take it away!"
He kept on with these loud refusals, disturbing the atmosphere of the feast. This is how it sometimes is at God's table.

Someone who has heard about ecstatic love, but never tasted it, disrupts the banquet.

He's all fire and no light,
all husk and no kernel. The king gave orders,
"Cupbearer, do what you must."

This is how your invisible guide acts, the chess champion across from you that always wins.

He cuffed
the scholar's head and said, "Taste!" and "Again!"

The cup was drained, and the intellectual started singing and telling ridiculous jokes.

He joined the garden, snapping his fingers and swaying. Soon, of course, he had to pee.

He went out, and there near the latrine
was a beautiful woman, one of the king's harem.

His mouth hung open. He wanted her! Right then,
he wanted her! And she was not unwilling.

They fell to, on the ground. You've seen a baker rolling dough. He kneads it gently at first, then more roughly. He pounds it on the board.

It softly groans under his palms.

Now he spreads
it out and rolls it flat. Then he bunches it, and rolls it all the way out again,
thin.

Now he adds water and mixes it well.

Now salt,
and a little more salt. Now he shapes it delicately to its final shape and slides it into the oven, which is already hot.

You remember breadmaking!

This is how your desire tangles with a desired one.

And it's not just a metaphor for a man and a woman making love.
Warriors in battle do this too.

A great mutual embrace is always happening between the eternal and what dies, between essence and accident.

The sport has different rules in every case,
but it's basically the same,

and remember, the way
you make love is the way God will be with you.

The Captain thinks the soil looks fertile,
so he sows his seed. Sleeping,
he makes love to a dream image of the girl,
and his semen spurts out.

He wakes up,
"I am in love."

His infatuation is a blackwater wave carrying him away.
Something makes a phantom
appear in the darkness of a well,
and the phantom itself becomes strong enough to throw actual lions into the hole.

The Captain does not take the girl straight to the Caliph. Instead, he camps in a secluded meadow. Blazing, he can't tell ground from sky! His reason is lost in a drumming sound, worthless radish and son of a radish,

this cultivator tears off the woman's pants
and lies down between her legs,
his penis moving straight to the mark.

Just then, there's a rising cry of soldiers outside the tent.

A black lion from a nearby swamp
has gotten in among the horses.

The Captain leaps up with bare bottom shining, scimitar in hand.

The lion is jumping twenty feet
in the air, tents billowing like an ocean. The Captain splits the lion's head with one blow.

Now he's running back to the woman.
When he stretches out the beauty again, his penis

goes even more erect.

The engagement,
the coming together, is as with the lion.

His penis stays erect all through and does not scatter semen feebly.

The beautiful one is amazed at his virility. With great energy she joins with his energy. Their two spirits go out from them as one.

Whenever two are linked
in this way,
another comes from the unseen. It may be through birth,
if nothing prevents conception,

but a third does come when two unite in love, or in hate.

The intense qualities of such joining have consequences. Such association bears progeny.

There are children to consider!
Children born of your sexual energy shared with another are entities in the invisible world. They have form and speech.

They are crying to you now.
You have forgotten us. Come back!
Be aware of this.

A man and woman together always have a spirit-result.
The Captain was not so aware.

He fell and stuck like a gnat
in a pot of buttermilk, totally absorbed in his love affair.

Then just as suddenly, he's uninterested.
"Don't say a word of this to the Caliph." He takes the girl and presents her.

The Caliph is smitten.
She's a hundred times more beautiful than he imagined! He also has the idea of entering her beauty and comes to do his wanting.

Memory raises his penis, straining in thought toward the pushing down and lifting up that makes it grow large with delight.

As he lies down
with her, though, there comes a tiny sound like a mouse might make,
a suggestion from God that he lay off these voluptuous doings. The penis droops

and desire slips away.

The girl remembers the Captain running out to kill the lion with his member standing straight up, then the running back.

Long and loud

her laughter. Anything she thinks of only increases it like the laughing of those who eat hashish.
Everything is funny.

When she gets hold of herself,
the girl tells all,
the Captain's running about the camp hard as a rhino's horn,
then the Caliph's member shrinking
for one mouse-whisper.

The Caliph comes back to his clarity,

"In the pride of my power I took this woman from another, so of course someone came to knock on my door.

The adulterer pimps for his own wife. When you cause injury to someone, you draw the same injury to yourself.

This lusting repetition must stop somewhere.
Here, in an act of mercy. I'll send you back to the Captain.
May you both enjoy the pleasure."

This is the virility
of a prophet. The Caliph was sexually impotent, but his manliness was powerful.

The kernel of true manhood is the ability to abandon sensual indulgence.

The intensity of the Captain's libido is less than a husk compared to the Caliph's nobility in ending the cycle of sowing lust and reaping secrecy and meanness.

TWO WAYS OF RUNNING

A certain man had a jealous wife and a very appealing maidservant.

The wife was careful not to leave them alone, ever.

For six years they were never left in a room together.

But then, one day at the public bath
the wife remembered she'd left her silver basin at home.

"Please, go get the basin," she told her maid. The girl jumped to the task knowing she would finally get to be alone with the master.

She ran joyfully. She flew. Desire took them both so quickly they didn't latch the door.

With great speed
they joined. When bodies blend in copulation, spirits also merge.

Meanwhile, the wife back at the bathhouse is washing her hair.

"What have I done!
I've set cotton wool on fire! I've put the ram in with the ewe!"

She washed the clay soap off and ran, fixing her chador about her as she went.

The maid ran for love.
The wife ran out of jealousy and fear.

There is a great difference.

A mystic lover flies moment to moment. The fearful ascetic drags along month to month.

The length of a day
for a lover may be fifty thousand years!
There's no way to understand this with your mind. You must burst open!

Love is a quality of God. Fear is an attribute of those who think they serve God,
but actually they're preoccupied with penis
and vagina.

Rule-keepers run on foot along the surface.
Lovers move like lightning and wind.

No contest.
Theologians mumble, rumble-dumble, necessity and free will, while lover and beloved pull themselves into each other.

The worried wife
reaches the door and opens it.

The maid is disheveled, flushed, unable to speak.

The husband begins his five-times prayer. As though experimenting with clothes, he holds up some flaps and edges. She sees his testicles and penis so wet, semen still dribbling out,
spurts of jism and vaginal juices

drenching the thighs of the maid.
The wife slaps him
on the side of the head,
"Is this the way a man prays,
with his balls? Does your penis long for union like this?
Is that why her legs are so covered with this stuff?"
These are good questions.
People who repress desires often turn, suddenly,
into hypocrites.

11. Love's Secret

Rumi makes preposterous claims. One of the most startling is, "Our loving is the way God's secret gets told!"³² Love is an open secret, the most obvious thing in the world and the most hidden, with no why to how it keeps its mystery. Sufis say the genesis of lovers meeting is God's sweetest secret.

A saying of Muhammad is, Human awareness is my secret and I am its secret. The inner knowledge of spirit-essence is the secret within the secret. I have placed this knowing within the heart of my true servant, and no one can know his state but I. The knowing of essence is love's secret.

There is a truth that comes with following the energies, and there is a love, a truth-knowing essence, in the innermost heart. Rumi tries to lead us into this region that never fades and has no limits, that comes when we recognize that everyone is as precious as our own children and grandchildren. Bawa was clear with me that I needed to move beyond blood ties. Having children opened my heart, but he saw that I need to include everyone in my family. He so beautifully saw every human being he came in contact with as kin. My love you, my children, grandchildren, brothers, sisters, mothers, fathers, uncles, aunts, great-grandchildren. Every discourse began and ended with a declaration of the family connection.

Some may dismiss this as one-world, peacenik sentimentality. I'm not advocating we disband the armies yet, or even the churches, though that's tempting to say. It's good to have sanctuaries and singing and silence and Wednesday night prayer. We need more sacred space outdoors, though, fewer enclosed places, and please let's quit killing each other over books! Let's move on to killing each other over bluegrass and salad oil and circumcision and predestination and foreplay and whose uncle is the right line, where the prepositions go, and what happens after we die. Those are worth fighting for. The book thing is just getting really old.

Bawa Muhaiyaddeen says,

Do not ever fight or argue, because for God there are no fights and no arguments. For that One everything is love; everything is in the form of love, compassion, and truth. May God provide you with the blessings and grace to live in that state.

CLOSE TO BEING TRUE

How can we know the divine qualities
from within? If we know only through metaphors, it's like when children ask what sex

feels like and you answer, "Like candy, so sweet." The suchness of sex comes with being inside the pleasure.

Whatever you say about mysteries,
I know or I don't know, both are close to being true. Neither is quite a lie.

WHAT HURTS THE SOUL?

We tremble, thinking we're about to dissolve
into nonexistence, but nonexistence
fears even more that it might be given human form!

Loving God is the only pleasure. Other delights turn bitter. What hurts the soul?

To live without tasting the water of its own essence.
People focus on death and this material earth.
They have doubts about soul water.

Those doubts can be reduced! Use night to wake your clarity. Darkness and the living water are lovers. Let them stay up together.

When merchants eat their big meals
and sleep their dead sleep,
we night-thieves go to work.

Love is the way messengers
from the mystery tell us things.

Love is the mother. We are her children.
She shines inside us, visible-invisible,

as we lose trust or feel it start to grow again.

HIDDEN INSIDE

Hiding is the hidden purpose of creation. Bury your seed and wait. After you die, all the thoughts you had will throng around like children.

The heart is the secret inside

the secret. Call the secret language and never be sure what you conceal. It's unsure people who get the blessing.

Climbing jasmine, opening rose, nightingale song, these are inside the chill November wind. They are its secret.

How did you discover mine?
Your laugh. Only the soul knows what love is. This moment in time and space is an eggshell with an embryo crumpled inside, soaked in spirit-yolk, under the wing of grace, until it breaks free of mind to become the song of birds and their breathing.

If everyone could see what love is,
each would set up a tentpole in the ocean.

The world's population pitched and living easily within the sea! What if inside

every lover's tear you saw the face of the Friend: Muhammad, Jesus, Buddha,

the impossible-possible philosopher,
the glass diamond one, Shams Tabriz?

60

They try to say what you are, spiritual or sexual?
They wonder about Solomon and all his wives.

In the body of the world, they say, there is a soul and you are that.

But we have ways within each other
that will never be said by anyone.

Come to the orchard in spring.
There is light and wine and sweethearts
in the pomegranate flowers.

If you do not come, these do not matter.
If you do come, these do not matter.

12. Love's Discipline

Rumi says an ecstatic human being is a polished mirror that cannot help reflecting. What we love, we are. As the heart comes cleaner, we see the kingdom as it is. We become reflected light. The polishing may be related to practices, a devotion we do every day that is an emptying out. Or it may be that when we live in the soul, everything can be used for clarity. Muhammad once said, "People who insult me are only polishing the mirror." I can't say precisely what polishing the mirror of the heart means, but I feel it happening slowly, and it does seem to be related to discipline, by which I mean intentionally giving time to what Rumi calls the jeweled inner life, which could be just the witness watching the mind.

In another passage Rumi says the polishing is done by the intensity of our longings. It is so difficult to remember who we are and to act from there. Various remembrance habits are helpful. Zikr, five-times prayer, a walk at sunset, twenty minutes of meditation. Stonework, singing, poetry. Find practices that are specifically yours. There comes then a creativeness at the end of the polishing that Rumi calls "looking into the creek." It's as though seeing becomes lucid dreaming. We watch the play of soul creatures. The gates of light swing open. We look in.

WHO MAKES THESE CHANGES?

Who makes these changes?
I shoot an arrow right.
It lands left.

I ride after a deer and find myself chased by a hog.

I plot to get what I want
and end up in prison.

I dig pits to trap others
and fall in.

I should be suspicious
of what I want.

DROWNING

What can I say to someone so curled up with wanting, so constricted in his love? Break your pitcher against a rock. We don't need any longer to haul pieces of the ocean around.

We must drown, away from heroism,
and descriptions of heroism.

Like a pure spirit lying down, pulling its body over it, like a bride her husband for a cover to keep her warm.

THE DOG PROBLEM

Now, what if a dog's owner
were not able to control it?

A poor dervish might appear: the dog storms out.
The dervish says, "I take refuge with God
when the dog of arrogance attacks,"

and the dog's owner has to say,
"So do I! I'm helpless against this creature even in my own house!

Just as you can't come close,
I can't go out!"

This is how animal energy becomes monstrous
and ruins your life's freshness and beauty.

Think of taking this dog
out to hunt! You'd be the quarry.

ZIKR

A naked man jumps in the river, hornets swarming
above him. The water is the zikr, remembering, There is no reality but God.
There is only God.

The hornets are his sexual memories, this woman,
that, or if a woman, this man, that.
The head comes up. They sting.

Breathe water. Become river head to foot.
Hornets leave you alone then.

Even if you're far from the river,
they pay no attention.

No one looks for stars when the sun's out.
A person blended into God does not disappear.
He or she is just completely soaked in God's qualities. Do you need a quote from the Qur'an?

All shall be brought into our presence.

Join those travelers. The lamps we burn go out, some quickly. Some last till daybreak.
Some are dim, some intense, all are fed with fuel. If a light goes out in one house, that doesn't affect the next house.

This is the story of the animal soul,
not the divine soul. The sun shines on every house.
When it goes down, all houses get dark.

Light is the image of your teacher. Your enemies love the dark. A spider weaves a web over a light, out of herself makes a veil.

Don't try to control a wild horse by grabbing its leg.
Take hold the neck. Use a bridle. Be sensible.
Then ride! There is a need for self-denial.

Don't be contemptuous of old obediences. They help.

THE CORE OF MASCULINITY

The core of masculinity does not derive from being male, nor friendliness from those who console.

Your old grandmother says, "Maybe you shouldn't go to school. You look a little pale."

Run when you hear that.
A father's stern slaps are better.

Your bodily soul wants comforting.
The severe father wants spiritual clarity.

He scolds but eventually leads you into the open.

Pray for a tough instructor
to hear and act and stay within you.

We have been busy accumulating solace.
Make us afraid of how we were.

CLEAR BEING

I honor those who try
to rid themselves of lying,
who empty the self
and have only clear being there.

THE SOUL'S FRIEND

Listen to your essential self, the Friend.
When you feel longing, be patient,
and also prudent, moderate with eating and drinking.

Be like a mountain in the wind.
Do you notice how it moves? There are sweet illusions that arrive to lure you away.

Make some excuse to them, "I have indigestion," or "I need to meet my cousin."

You fish, the baited hook may be fifty or even sixty gold pieces, but is it really worth your freedom in the ocean?

When traveling, stay close to your bag.
I am the bag that holds what you love.
You can be separated from me!

Live carefully in the joy of this friendship.
Don't think, But those others love me so.

Some invitations sound like the fowler's whistle to the quail, friendly, but not quite how you remember the call of your soul's Friend.

LONGING

Longing is the core of mystery.
Longing itself brings the cure.
The only rule is, Suffer the pain.

Your desire must be disciplined,
and what you want to happen
in time, sacrificed.

The morning wind spreads its fresh smell.
We must get up to take that in,
that wind that lets us live.
Breathe, before it's gone.

WHAT DRAWS YOU?

There are two types on the path, those who come against their will, the blindly religious,
and those who obey out of love.

The former have ulterior motives.
They want the midwife near because she gives them milk.
The others love the beauty of the nurse.

The former memorize the prooftexts of conformity and repeat them. The latter disappear into whatever draws them to God.

Both are drawn from the source.
Any motion is from the mover.
Any love from the beloved.

FEAR

Everyone can see how they have polished the mirror
of the self, which is done with the longings we're given.

Not everyone wants to be king!
There are different roles and many choices
within each.

Troubles come. One person packs up and leaves. Another stays and deepens in a love for being human.

In battle, one runs fearing for his life. Another, just as scared, turns and fights more fiercely.

A TEACHER'S PAY

God has said Be moderate with eating and drinking,
but never, Be satisfied when taking in light.

God offers a teacher the treasures of the world,
and the teacher responds, "To be in love with God and expect to be paid for it!" A servant wants to be rewarded for what he does. A lover wants only to be in love's presence, that ocean whose depth will never be known.

LOOKING INTO THE CREEK

The way the soul is with the senses and the intellect is like a creek.

When desire weeds grow thick,
intelligence can't flow,
and soul creatures stay hidden.
But sometimes the reasonable clarity runs so strong
it sweeps the clogged stream open.

No longer weeping
and frustrated, your being grows as powerful as your wantings were before, more so. Laughing and satisfied, the masterful flow lets creatures of the soul appear.

You look down,
and it's lucid dreaming.
The gates made of light
swing open.
You see in.

THE POLISHER

As everything changes overnight, I praise
the breaking of promises.

Whatever love wants,
it gets, not next year, now!

I swear by the one who never says tomorrow,
as the circle of the moon refuses to sell installments of light. It gives all it has.

How do fables conclude, and who will explain them?
Every story is us. That's who we are,
from beginning to no-matter-how it ends.

Should I use the pronoun we? The Friend walks by, and bricks in the wall feel conscious. Infertile women give birth.
So beauty embodies itself.

Those who know the taste of a meal
are those who sit at the table and eat.

Lover and Friend are one being,
and separate beings too,

as the polisher melts
in the mirror's face.

13. Shift from Romance to Friendship

The story of the king, the handmaiden, and the doctor is of the movement from the erotic love of romance to the love of a meeting with the Friend, which is the mystery of this region. Rumi says that however we try to explain this new place, the explanation sounds embarrassing.

Some commentary clarifies, but with love silence is clearer. A pen goes scribbling along, but when it tries to write love, it breaks! If you want to expound on love, take your intellect out and let it lie down in the mud.

As Shakespeare changed the verb to be forever, Rumi changed the noun friend, dost in Farsi. A meeting takes place that translates inner life into outer and outer to inner. The sobbet of Friendship is "the way messengers from the mystery talk to us." Call it Holy Spirit, Khidr, Buddha-mind, Friend, Beloved, or Lord, there's a shift from the romantic ache, which is a love dis-ease, to an encounter with "a person like the dawn," whose face loosens the knot of intellectual discourse. This Friendship breaks through the stalled-limbo of desire to become a reckoning (the astrolabe image) "that sights into the mysteries of God." Love changes from the exciting synapse of relationship to a condition of being, the truest health.

BURNT KABOB

Last year, I admired the wines. This,
I'm wandering inside the red world.

Last year, I gazed at the fire,
This year I'm burnt kabob.

Thirst drove me down to the water
where I drank the moon's reflection.

Now I am a lion staring up, totally lost in love with the thing itself.

Don't ask questions about longing. Look in my face.

Soul drunk, body ruined, these two sit helpless in a wrecked wagon.
Neither knows how to fix it.

And my heart, I'd say it was more like a donkey sunk in a mudhole, struggling and miring deeper.

But listen to me: for one moment, quit being sad. Hear blessings dropping their blossoms around you. God.

SITTING IN THE ORCHARD

A man sits in an orchard, fruit trees full and the vines plump. He has his head on his knee; his eyes are closed.

His friend says, "Why stay sunk in mystical meditation when the world is like this?
Such visible grace."

He replies, "This outer is an elaboration of the inner. I prefer the origin."

Natural beauty is a tree limb reflected in the water of a creek, quivering there, not there. The growing that moves in the soul is more real than tree limbs and reflections.

We laugh and feel happy or sad over all this.

Try instead to get a scent of the true orchard. Taste the vineyard within the vineyard.

THE PRINCE OF KABUL

Here is a story of a young prince who suddenly sees that the ambitious world is a big game
of king of the mountain, a boy scrambling up a pile of sand to call out, "I am king."

Then another throws him off to make his momentary claim, then another and so on.

World complications can sometimes become very simple very quickly, and age has no bearing on this realization.

Neither are words necessary to see into mystery. Just be and it is. A king dreams his young son has died. He falls into such grief in the dream that the world darkens, and his body grows inert.

Suddenly he wakes into a joy he's never felt.

His son is alive! He thinks to himself,
Such sorrow causes such joy. It is a kind of joke on human beings that we are pulled between these two states as though with ropes on the sides of a collar. Dream interpreters say laughter in a dream foretells weeping and regret; tears, some new delight. Now the king has another thought, What occurs in dream can actually happen any second!

If my son dies, I will need a keepsake.
When a candle goes out, you need another lit candle. My son must give us offspring.

He's of marriageable age. I'll find him a bride. This is flawless reasoning, dear reader. Open any medical text and look at the table of contents: tumors, rashes, fevers, there are a thousand ways to die!

Every step takes you into a scorpion pit.

He found a wife for the prince, not from royal blood or from wealth, but from a poor, honest worker's family, with the greater riches of an open heart. A beautiful young woman clear as the morning sun. The women in the court object vigorously, but the king has decided. He knows the value of inner wealth as opposed to the other: a long curving file of moving camels, as against bits of hair and dung. If you own the caravan, why bother with refuse left behind? In a quirk of destiny, as the marriage approaches, the old woman

of Kabul falls in love with the handsome, generous-spirited prince. She enchants him with Babylonian magic, so that he leaves his bride at the wedding, and for a year

he kisses the sole of her Kabulian shoe.
Everyone weeps for him, while he laughs

in his ignorance. His father the king prays constantly, Lord! Lord!, and because of that surrendered calling out, a master comes from the road to save the prince. "Go to the graveyard before dawn," says the master.

"Find the bleached-white tomb beside the wall. Dig there in the direction your prayer rug points. You'll discover how God works." This story is long, and you're tired. I'll get to the point.

The prince does as the master says and wakes.
He runs to his father carrying a sword and a shroud, the signs his digging brought,

showing that he recognizes his mistake
and that he is ready for whatever the consequences are. The king orders that the entire city be decorated to celebrate the new marriage. Such an extravagant feast is prepared that sherbets are set out for the street dogs! The prince is so astonished by how the old woman

enthralled him, and by the return of his wisdom, that he falls down in a swoon for three days. Little by little with rosewater remedies

he wakes again. A year passes in this new life.
Then the king begins to joke with his son,
"Do you remember that old friend of yours,

how it was in her bed?" "Don't mention it!"
screams the son. "That was delusion.
I have found my real bride now." This prince is the soul of humanity, your essence.

The old woman of Kabul is the color and perfume of the sensory world. Release from the spell comes when you say, I take refuge with the lord of daybreak. The woman has great power.

She can tie knots in your chest that only

God's breathing loosens. Don't take her appeal lightly. The prince was in her net for one year. You might stay there sixty. You say you grow restless when you don't drink the dark world-drink, but if you could see a living one for one moment, you would draw out that thorn from your foot and walk with no limp. Let the lamp of the Friend's face show you where to go. Selflessness is your true self, sword and shroud. Whereas this is how most people live: sleeping on the bank of a freshwater stream, lips dry with thirst.

In the dream you're running toward a mirage.
As you run, you're proud of being the one who sees the oasis. You brag to your friends,

"I have the heart-vision. Follow me to the water!" This love of spying far-off satisfactions, this traveling, keeps you from tasting the real water of where you are,

and who. Nearer than the big vein on your neck,
with waves lapping against you: here, here.

The way is who and where you already are,
sleeping in your very being: that which sleeps and wakes and sleeps and dreams the sweet water is the taste of God. Maybe another traveler will come to help you see the stream,

like the man who laughs during a long drought

when everyone else is weeping. The crops have dried up. The vineyard leaves are black.
People are gasping and dying like fish thrown up on shore, but one man is always smiling. A group comes to ask, "Have you no compassion for this suffering?" He answers,

"To your eyes this is a drought. To me, it's a form of God's joy. Everywhere in this desert I see green corn growing waist-high, a sea-wilderness of young ears greener than leeks. I reach to touch them.

How could I not! You and your friends are like Pharaoh drowning in the Red Sea of your body's blood. Become friends with Moses and see this other river water."

When you think your father is guilty of an injustice, his face looks cruel.
Joseph, to the envious brothers, seems dangerous. When you make peace with your father, he will look peaceful.

The whole world is a form for truth.

When someone does not feel grateful to that,
the forms appear to be as he feels.
They mirror his anger, his greed, his fear.

Make peace with the universe.
Take joy in it. It will turn to gold.
Resurrection will be now. Every moment
a new beauty, and never any boredom.

Instead, the pouring noise of many springs in your ears. The tree limbs will move

like people dancing who suddenly know the mystical life. The leaves snap their fingers like they're hearing music.

They are! A sliver of mirror shines out from under a felt covering. Think how it will be when the whole thing is open to the air and sunlight! There are mysteries I'm not telling you.

THE WRIST

Who are you? The inner vision of consciousness?
The heart? A sacred half-light, are you that?

Do you grow gatherings? Are you a friend of the sun, who comes and goes so quickly?

Do not forget your vertical passage,
the night of power,³³
and don't hide from the one for whom all our secrets are down in the pillow under his head, doctor of lovers, soul for this thick world,
the one who spirals iron
like dough and makes the body lightedness.

No belief is necessary to enter this tent
where one love story changes to another.

I remember that with these words brought here by a falcon from the wrist of Shams.

If the beloved is everywhere,
the lover is a veil,

but when living itself
becomes the Friend,
lovers disappear.

THE KING, THE HANDMAIDEN, AND THE DOCTOR

Do you know why your soul-mirror
does not reflect as clearly as it might?

Because rust has begun to cover it.
It needs to be cleaned.

Here's a story about the inner state
that's meant by soul-mirror.

In the old days there was a king who was powerful in both kingdoms, the visible as well as the spirit world.

One day as he was riding on the hunt, he saw a girl and was greatly taken with her beauty. As was the custom, he paid her family handsomely and asked that she come to be a servant
at the palace. He was in love with her.

The feelings
trembled and flapped in his chest like a bird newly put in a cage.

But as soon as she arrived, she fell ill.

He brought doctors together. "You have both our lives in your hands. Her life is my life. Whoever heals her will receive the finest treasure I have, the coral inlaid with pearls, anything!"

So the doctors began, but no matter what they did, the girl got worse.

The king saw that his doctors were helpless. He ran barefooted to the mosque. He knelt on the prayer rug and soaked the point of it with his tears.

He dissolved to an annihilated state. He cried out loud for help, and the ocean of grace surged over him. He slept on the prayer rug in the midst of his weeping.

In his dream an old man appeared. "Good king, tomorrow a stranger will come. He is the physician you can trust. Listen to him."

As dawn rose, the king was sitting up in the belvedere on his roof. He saw someone coming, a person like the dawn.

He ran to meet this guest. Like two swimmers who love the water, their souls knit together without being sewn, no seam. The king said, "You are my beloved, not the girl!" He opened his arms and held the saintly doctor to him. He kissed his hand and his forehead and asked how his journey had been. He led him to the head table.

"At last, I have found what patience can bring, this one whose face answers any question, who simply by looking can loosen the knot of intellectual discussion."

They talked and ate a spirit-meal. Then the king took the doctor to where the girl lay.

The secret of her pain was opened to him, but he didn't tell the king. It was love, of course.

Love is the astrolabe that sights into the mysteries of God. Earth-love, spirit-love, any love looks into that yonder,
but whatever I try to say explaining love is embarrassing!

A pen went scribbling along.
When it tried to write love, it broke.

If you want to expound on love, take your intellect out and let it lie down in the mud. It's no help.

Nothing is so strange in this world as the sun. The sun of the soul even more so. You want proof that it exists, so you stay up all night talking about it.

Finally you sleep
as the sun comes up. Look at it!

Word of that sun,
Shams, came, and everything hid. Husam touches my arm.
He wants me to say more about Shams.

Not now, Husam.
I don't know how to make words make sense, or praise.
In the Friend-place nothing true can be said.
Let me just be here.

But Husam begs, "Feed me. Hurry!
Time is a sharp downstroke. A Sufi is supposed to be a child of the moment! Don't say tomorrow or later."
I reply,

"It's better that the way of the Friend be concealed in a story. Let the mystery come through what people say around the lovers, not from what lovers say to each other."

"No! I want this as naked and true as it can be. I don't wear a shirt when I lie down with my beloved."

"Husam! If the Friend came to you naked, your chest could not stand it.
Ask for what you want, but within some limits!"
This has no end.

Go back to the beginning,
the end of the story of the king and the lovesick
maiden and the holy doctor, who said,

"Leave me alone
with the girl." He quietly began, "Where are you from?
Who are your relatives? Who else are you close to in that region?"

He held her hand to feel the pulse.
She told many stories mentioning many names.
He would say the names again to test the response of her pulse.

Finally he asked, "When you visit other towns, where are you most likely to go?"
She mentioned one town and another, where she bought bread and where salt,

until he happened to say Samarkand!
The dear city sweet as candy. She blushed. Her breath caught. Oh, she loves a goldsmith in Samarkand!
She misses him so.

"Where exactly does he live?"
"At the head of the bridge on Ghatafar Street."
"Now I can heal you."

The doctor went to the king and told him only part of the story. "On some pretext we must bring a certain goldsmith from Samarkand."

The king's messengers went and easily persuaded the man to leave his town for a while. He arrived, and the doctor said,

"Marry the girl to this man and she will be completely cured." It was done, and for six months those two loved and made love and completely satisfied themselves with each other. The girl was restored to perfect health.

Then the physician gave the goldsmith a potion, so that he began to sicken. His handsomeness faded. He became sunken-cheeked and jaundiced and ugly.

The girl stopped loving him. Any love based on physical beauty is not the deepest love. Choose to love what does not die. The generous one is not hard to find.

But what about the doctor's poisoning the poor goldsmith! It was not done for his friend the king's sake.

The reason is a mystery, like Khidr's cutting the boy's throat. When someone is killed by a doctor like this one, it's a blessing, even though it might not seem so.

Such a doctor is part of a larger generosity. Don't judge his actions. You are not living so completely within the truth as he is.

Reason has no way to say its love. Only love opens that secret.

If you want to be more alive, love
is the truest health.

14. Union

The intensest, the most poignant cry comes from one who has known the union and lost it. Rumi says, Give me his longing!

I have seen one living in the state of union, at least one. They may exist in various guises all around us. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen³⁴ was totally present in each moment and so attentive to every detail, the tiniest bit of outer onion-skin left on a chopped bit, and also he felt with each breath the divine presence flowing through him. It was exhilarating to be there where he sat on his bed in Philadelphia, like breathing the ozone near a waterfall. He answered questions and listened to stories of what happened to people during their days. He laughed and tended business matters. He supervised the cooking of lunch, did the measuring and pouring in of spices.

Rumi says lovers are those who may seem to be judiciously considering very troubling matters, the world situation, relationship difficulties, "but really they're leaning back riding in a wagon on the Bukhara road, soul beauty their only expertise." That's the way it felt in Bawa's room. He was the most loving person I've ever met, and he had much to say about the innermost heart, the qalb. He lived there. He called it a house with ninety-nine windows (the qualities of God), a sanctuary, a flowering plenitude, a benevolence, a piece of flesh that does not die, the kaaba of the true pilgrimage, and source of the light that is the ruh, the soul. He also held that human beings cannot, and must not, judge one another's innermost heart. Only divine wisdom can do that.

The heart cannot be talked about. We must experience its depths in that mysterious osmosis of presence with presence. Hazrat Inayat Khan says that our purpose here is to make God a reality, a daunting and a potentially unbalancing task. One can get too full in the ecstatic state. Rumi warns that the roof is a dangerous place to drink wine. We can die trying to make God a reality. If we don't fall from the roof, we wake with a hangover that weakens consciousness. Hangover remorse can be helpful then. The work of balancing love (enthusiasm) and discipline (practical helpfulness) is beautifully addressed in the first poem of this section, the drink of water that is "The Sunrise Ruby."

THE SUNRISE RUBY

In the early morning hour,
just before dawn, lover and beloved wake
to take a drink of water.

She asks, "Do you love me or yourself more?
Really, tell the absolute truth."

He says, "There's nothing left of me.
I'm like a ruby held up to the sunrise.
Is it still a stone, or a world made of redness? It has no resistance to sunlight."

The ruby and the sunrise are one.
Be courageous and discipline yourself.

Completely become hearing and ear,
and wear this sun-ruby as an earring.

Work. Keep digging your well.
Don't think about getting off from work.
Water is there somewhere.

Submit to a daily practice.
Your loyalty to that is a ring on the door.

Keep knocking, and the joy inside will eventually open a window and look out to see who's there.

THE GENERATIONS I PRAISE

Yesterday the beauty of early dawn came over me, and I wondered who my heart would reach toward. Then this morning again and you. Who am I? Wind and fire and watery ground move me mightily because they're pregnant with love, love pregnant with God. These are the early morning generations I praise.

ONE SWAYING BEING

Love is not condescension, never that, nor books, nor any marking on paper, nor what people say of each other. Love is a tree with branches reaching into eternity

and roots set deep in eternity,

and no trunk! Have you seen it?
The mind cannot. Your desiring cannot. The longing you feel for this love comes from inside you.

When you become the Friend, your longing will be as the man in the ocean who holds to a piece of wood. Eventually, wood, man, and ocean become one swaying being,

Shams Tabriz, the secret of God.

Held like this, to draw in milk,
no will, tasting clouds of milk,
never so content.

HANGOVER REMORSE

Muhammad said, "Three kinds of people are particularly pathetic. The powerful man out of power, the rich man with no money, and the learned man laughed at."

Yet these are those who badly want change!
Some dogs sit satisfied in their kennels.
But one who last year drank ecstatic union,
the pre-eternity agreement, who this year
has a hangover from bad-desire wine,
the way he cries out for the majesty
he's lost,

give me that longing!

SOUL, HEART, AND BODY ONE MORNING

There's a morning where presence comes over you,
and you sing like a rooster in your earth-colored shape.

Your heart hears and, no longer frantic, begins to dance. At that moment soul reaches total emptiness. Your heart becomes Mary, miraculously pregnant, and body, like a two-day-old Jesus says wisdom words. Now the heart turns to light, and the body picks up the tempo.

Where Shamsi Tabriz walks, the footprints are musical notes and holes you fall through into space.

Today, like every other day, we wake up empty and frightened. Don't open the door to the study and begin reading. Take down a musical instrument.

Let the beauty we love be what we do.
There are hundreds of ways to kneel and kiss the ground.

Out beyond ideas of wrongdoing and rightdoing
there is a field. I'll meet you there.

When the soul lies down in that grass,
the world is too full to talk about.

Ideas, language, even the phrase each other,
doesn't make any sense.

15. Die Before You Die

Death is key to this drastic change described in the last section. When we know in some deeply certain way that we are going to die, we move toward surrender more quickly. It is life's huge riddle, that we must die before we die, this dissolving into the heart. We shall certainly be changed in death, if not before.

Judge a moth by the beauty of its candle.

Shams is invisible because he is inside sight.
He is the intelligent essence of what is everywhere at once, seeing.

HUSAM

There is a way of passing away from the personal,
a dying that makes one plural.

A gnat lights in buttermilk to become nourishment for many. Your soul is like that, Husam.³⁵

Hundreds of thousands of impressions
from the invisible are wanting to come through you!

I get dizzy with the abundance. When life is this dear, it means the source is pulling us.

Freshness comes from there. We're given the gift of continuously dying and being resurrected.

The body's death now to me is like going to sleep.
No fear of drowning. I'm in another water.

Stones don't dissolve in rain. This is the end of the Fifth Book of the Masnavi.

With constellations in the night sky, some look up and point. Others can be guided by the arrangements:

the Sagittarian bow piercing enemies, the Water Jar soaking fruit trees, the Bull plowing its truth,

the Lion tearing darkness open to red satin. Use these words to change. Be kind and honest, and harmful poisons will turn sweet inside you.

Lovers are alive to the extent
they can die. A great soul approaches

Shams. What are you doing here?

Answer: What is there to do?

THAT QUICK

A lover looks at creekwater and wants to be that quick to fall, to kneel, then all the way down in full prostration.

A lover wants to die of his love
like a man with dropsy
who knows that water will kill him,
but he can't deny his thirst.

A lover loves death. Spill your jug in the river! Your shame and fear are like felt layers covering coldness.

Throw them off, and rush naked
into the joy of death.

EMPTY BOAT

Some huge work goes on growing.
How could one person's words matter?

Where you walk heads pop from the ground.
What is one seed head compared to you?

On my death day I'll know the answer.
I have cleared this house, so that your work can, when it comes, fill every room.

I slide like an empty boat pulled over the water.

In the slaughterhouse of love they kill only
the best, none of the weak or deformed.
Don't run away from this dying.
Whoever's not killed for love is dead meat.

I TRUST YOU

The soul is a newly skinned hide, bloody and gross. Work on it with manual discipline, and the bitter tanning acid of grief.

You'll become lovely and very strong.
If you can't do this work yourself, don't worry.
You don't have to make a decision, one way or another.

The Friend, who knows a lot more than you do,
will bring difficulties and grief and sickness,
as medicine, as happiness, as the moment

when you're beaten, when you hear Checkmate,
and can finally say with Hallaj's voice,
I trust you to kill me.

IMADU'L-MULK

Remember the story of the king who is so enraged with his close friend that he's about to kill him!

A privileged intercessor, Imadu'l-Mulk, steps in and saves the man, but then the king's close friend, who has just been saved, turns away and will not thank the intercessor. A teacher comes and asks, "Why do you act so strangely?" He answers, "I was in the state Muhammad describes as No other has been this way with God, this near. If the king wishes to cut my head off, he may furnish me a new one, or not. Pitchblack night in his presence is worth a hundred festival days without him. Inside the presence there's no religion, no grace, no unfaithfulness, no punishment, and no language can say anything about it, except that it is bidden, bidden.

You have said what you are.

I am what I am.

Your actions in my head,
my head here in my hands
with something circling inside.

I have no name for what circles
so perfectly.

Some nights stay up till dawn,
as the moon sometimes does for the sun.
Be a full bucket pulled up the dark way
of a well, then lifted out into light.

16. Harsh Evidence

For Kharragani and his wife love is conflict, necessary opposition. Two armies set the battle lines, a black flag here, a white flag there, then something happens between them. The Red Sea roars over both. Kharragani's bossy wife is right for him. The heat of their being together gets a spring unfrozen and flowing again.

In this region love is a courtroom where harsh evidence must be brought in. Faithfulness must turn to betrayal and betrayal into trust before any human being can become part of the truth. Surely love is a big part of the truth we're here to live.

There's an ordeal, some anguish and suffering, essential to a soul's growing into deeper love. Life must be lived. One definition of Sufism is joy at sudden disappointment. The Sufis know that precisely the right disaster comes at the right moment to break us open to the helplessness that an opening of the heart requires. This is harsh truth, but the truth. Love grows near truthfulness, and fades when words are tinged with lying. Love grows from the ruins of personality. There are heart-regions that one does not enter willingly, or knowingly, and that one actively tries to avoid reentering. I don't use it much, and know very little about it, but the word karma may belong here, along with Auden's stanza,

O stand, stand at the window
As the tears scald and start;
You shall love your crooked neighbor
With your crooked heart.³⁶

W. H. Auden is one of the best-loved poets in English for the very reason that he brings in the acerbic, the faithless, and the shadow within the deeply felt joy of his loving. There's an impending danger. To leave that dimension out of love poems is not to tell the full truth. Auden is gay, too, in all senses, which adds more depths to his cultural work.

KHARRAQANI'S MARRIAGE

The young seeker wonders, *How could a teacher
lie with that woman!* Can a guide agree with a thief?

Suddenly Sheikh Kharraqani³⁷ appears, riding a lion, firewood stacked behind him. His whip,
a live serpent. Every master rides a fierce lion, whether you see it or not. Know this with your other eyes: There are thousands of lions under your teacher's thighs and all of them stacked with wood!

Kharraqani knew the problem and immediately began to answer, "Well, it's not out of desire that I put up with her! Don't think that.
It's not her perfume or bright-colored clothes.

Enduring her public disdain has made me strong and patient. She is my practice.

Nothing can be clear without a polar opposite present. Two banners, one black, one white, and between them something gets settled.
Between Pharaoh and Moses,
the Red Sea."

HARSH EVIDENCE

What sort of person says that he or she wants to be polished and pure, then complains about being handled roughly?

Love is a lawsuit where harsh evidence must be brought in. To settle the case, the judge must see evidence.

You've heard that every buried treasure
has a snake guarding it.
Kiss the snake to discover the treasure!

Don't run from those who scold,
and don't turn away from cleansing conflict,
or you will remain weak.

THE STUPID THINGS I'VE DONE

Let your sunlight shine on this piece of dung,
and dry it out, so I can be used for fuel to warm a bathhouse.

Look on the terrible things I've done,
and cause herbs and eglantine to grow out of them.

The sun does this with the ground.
Think what glories God can make from the fertilizer of sinning!

CANDLE AT NOON

A man is wandering the marketplace at noon
with a candle in his hand, totally ecstatic.

"Hey," calls a shopkeeper, "is this a joke?
Who are you looking for?"

"Someone breathing Huuu, the divine breath."
"Well, there are plenty to choose from."

"But I want one who can be in anger and desire and still be a true human being in the same moment."

DERVISHES

When school and mosque and minaret get torn down, then dervishes can begin their community. Not until faithfulness turns to betrayal and betrayal into trust can any human being become part of the truth.

DOVES

People want you to be happy.
Don't keep serving them your pain!

If you could untie your wings
and free your soul of jealousy,

you and everyone around you would fly up like doves.

WHEN WORDS ARE TINGED WITH LYING

Muhammad gave this indication of how to know what's real. "When you feel a peaceful joy, you're near the truth.

Unquiet and off center, jealous or greedy,

then what you do seems pretentious
and those around you insincere.

Speak the clearest truth you know,
and let the uneasiness heal."

When words are tinged with lying,
they're like water dripping into an oil lamp.
The wick won't light, and the pleasure of your love room will diminish.

THERE YOU ARE

You're inside every kindness. When a sick person feels better, you're that, and the onset of disease too. You're sudden, terrible screaming. Some problems require we go for help. When we knock on a stranger's door, you sent us. Nobody answers. It's you! When work feels necessary, you are the way workers move in rhythm.
You are what is: the field, the players, the ball, those watching. Someone claims to have evidence that you do not exist. You're the one who brings the evidence in, and the evidence itself. You are inside the soul's great fear, every natural pleasure, every vicious cruelty. Someone loves something, someone else hates the same. There you are. Whatever anyone wants or not: political power, injustice, material possessions, those are your script, the handwriting we study. Body, soul, shadow. Whether reckless or careful,

you are what we do. It's absurd to ask your pardon. You're inside repentance, and sin! The wonder of various jewels,

agate, emerald. How we are during a day, then at night, you are those moods and the pure compassion we feel for each other. Every encampment has a tent

where the leader is, and also the wide truth of your imperial tent overall.

A night full of talking that hurts,
my worst held-back secrets: everything has to do with loving and not loving.

This night will pass.
Then we have work to do.

There's a shredding that's really a healing,
that makes you more alive!

A lion holds you in his arms.
Fingers rake the fretbridge for music.

Dance, when you're broken open.
Dance, if you've torn the bandage off.
Dance in the middle of the fighting.
Dance in your blood.
Dance, when you're perfectly free.

All I know of spirit
is this love.

YOUR DEFECTS

An empty mirror and your worst destructive habits,
when they are held up to each other,
that's when the real making begins.
That's what art and crafting are.

A tailor needs a torn garment to practice his expertise.
The trunks of trees must be cut and cut again
so they can be used for fine carpentry.

Your doctor must have a broken leg to doctor.
Your defects are the ways that glory gets manifested.

17. Meditation Pavane

This was my dream of August 10, 2001. I am a book in three parts. The first and last have generic, ineffable designations, the beginning-less beginning and the endless end. The middle part where (who) I am has an odd name that I see spelled out in capitals, MEDITATION PAVANE. Awake, I record the dream and think I have seen the word pavane before, though I don't know what it means, some kind of music? I look it up in the dictionary. "A grave and stately dance performed by couples in elaborate clothing, of Spanish and Italian origin, 15–16th century." A Mediterranean courtship dance, with a circle of elders observing. The word derives from a colloquial name for Padua and is related by folk etymology to the French pavaner, meaning to strut like a peacock. So a meditation pavane mixes the internal quiet of meditation with the social display of courtship.

There is a rare English word pavonine, meaning peacock-like or having the iridescence of their slender necks and the wide-open eyes on the tail feathers. Street pigeons sometimes have pavonine rings around their necks. I go to the Internet to search for pavane. The third item down has two familiar names, Barry and Shelley Phillips, friends of a friend, whom I will soon meet and do a bookstore Rumi reading with in Santa Cruz (October 2001). They are musicians specializing in Appalachian, Shaker, and Celtic melodies. Shelley has a CD called Pavane. Gourd Music is their label! I have published a volume of my own poetry, Gourd Seed (1993). I used to grow gourds.

The connections are clear. I call them to arrange some sound-studio time during my visit to Santa Cruz. That session turns into a CD, which we call What Was Said to the Rose, and also a concert in Santa Cruz (April 2002). The dance of courtship energies moving with the inner motions of meditation, let's say that mystery is the station of love explored in this section. The close-in irritation and excitement of the erotic, stepping with the cleansing of going-in.

The way we are led by dreams has been extremely important in my life. I have told the story elsewhere, several times, how I met my teacher in a dream on May 2, 1977. I'll tell it again: In my dream I am sleeping on the bluff above the Tennessee River five miles north of Chattanooga where I grew up. I wake up inside the dream, though still asleep. A ball of light rises off Williams Island and comes over me. It clarifies from the inside out and reveals a man sitting cross-legged with a white shawl over his head, which is bowed. He lifts his head and opens his eyes. "I love you," he says. "I love you too," I answer. The landscape, my first deep love, the curve of that river and the island, feels soaked with love, which is also just the ordinary dew forming in the night. I feel the process of the dew as a mixing of love with world-matter. That was the dream, and the only credential I have for working with Rumi's poetry. When I met the teacher in the dream, Bawa Muhaiyaddeen, a year and a half later in September of 1978, he told me to continue the work on Rumi. "It has to be done." Bawa died on December 8, 1986. I used to visit the Fellowship in Philadelphia several times a year for three or four days, over those nine years. He never asked for money in exchange for the wisdom he gave so generously. The curry was free too. Food truly does taste better when it's made by an enlightened being.

So let's have tea and look out at the cold sea. If you want one of these CDs that Barry and Shelley Phillips and I made (Irish, Appalachian, Shaker, and improvised music: cello, English horn, Irish harp, flute, with myself speaking Rumi poems, most of which are included in this volume), I'll send you one free. Call 800-682-8637. Leave your name and address.

RULES ABOUT RESTRAINT

There is nourishment like bread
that feeds one part of your life and nourishment like light for another.

There are many rules about restraint

with the former, but only one rule for the latter, Never be satisfied.

Eat and drink the soul substance,
as a wick does with the oil it soaks

in. Give light to the company.

THE COMPANY OF LOVERS

The rule that covers everything is:
How you are with others, expect that back.

If you want to know God, enjoy the company of lovers. If you want to be thought a great person, learn some subtle point and say it with many variations as the answer to every question. If you want to live your soul, find a friend like Shams and stay near.

THE LOOK THAT OPENS

We wait for inspiration and ask no fee,
the feel of sacred ambiance being enough.

So bring your malaise, your dullness,
your callous ingratitude.

As we meet you, the coming together itself will be medicine. We are the cure, the look that opens your looking.

STRAW AND GRASSES

There is no reality but God, says
the completely surrendered teacher, who is an ocean for all beings.

The levels of creation are straws in that ocean. The movement comes from agitation in the water.
When the ocean wants the dry stems calm,
it sends them close to shore.

When it wants them back in the deep surge, it does with them
as the wind does with grasses.

This never ends.

Friend, our closeness is this:
anywhere you put your foot, feel me
in the firmness under you.

How is it with this love,
I see your world and not you?

18. Love Dogs

The Sufis feel that dogs are our teachers with their faithfulness, their humility, and their bounding, unqualified welcome when we come home. The wordless intimacy of how we are with those beings teaches us to give ourselves wholeheartedly.

There's a Saturday Night Live sketch with John Lithgow as a Catholic priest hearing confession from actual dogs. A voice off-camera speaks for the dogs, "Father, I have barked at cats late at night. I have turned over a garbage can and eaten chicken bones." But Lithgow's face is so close to their faces and his intoning such, that the dogs begin to bark with the fun of it. It's hilarious, us forgiving them.

THE OCEAN SURGE

I want to be in such passionate adoration
that my tent gets pitched against the sky!

Let the beloved come and sit like a guard dog in front of the tent.

When the ocean surges, don't let me just hear it. Let it splash inside my chest!

LOVE DOGS

One night a man was crying Allab! Allab!
His lips grew sweet with praising,
until a cynic said, "So!
I have heard you calling out, but have you ever gotten any response?"

The man had no answer to that.
He quit praying and fell into a confused sleep.

He dreamed he saw Khidr,³⁸ the guide of souls,
in a thick, green foliage.

"Why did you stop praising?" "Because I've never heard anything back."

"This longing you express is the return message."

The grief you cry out from draws you toward union.

Your pure sadness
that wants help
is the secret cup.

Listen to the moan of a dog for its master.
That whining is the connection.

There are love dogs
no one knows the names of.

Give your life
to be one of them.

Inside water, a waterwheel turns.
A star circulates with the moon.

We live in this night ocean wondering,
What are these lights?

No better love than love with no object,
no more satisfying work than work with no purpose.

If you could give up tricks and cleverness,
that would be the cleverest trick!

A GREAT WAGON

When I see your face, the stones start spinning!
You appear; all studying wanders.
I lose my place.

Water turns pearly.
Fire dies down and doesn't destroy.

In your presence I don't want what I thought
I wanted, those three little hanging lamps.

Inside your face the ancient manuscripts seem like rusty mirrors.

You breathe, new shapes appear,
and the music of a desire as widespread as spring begins to move
like a great wagon.

Drive slowly. Some of us walking alongside are lame.

BLASPHEMY AND THE CORE

My soul keeps whispering, "Quickly,
be a wandering dervish, a salamander sitting in its homefire. Walk about watching the burning turn to roses.

As this love-secret we are both blasphemy and the core of Islam.

Don't wait! The open plain is better than any closing door. Ravens love ruins and cemetery trees. They can't help but fly there. For us this day is friends sitting together with silence shining in our faces."

You're song,
a wished-for song.

Go through the ear to the center
where sky is, where wind,
where silent knowing.

Put seeds and cover them.
Blades will sprout
where you do your work.

Keep walking, though there's no place to get to.
Don't try to see through the distances.
That's not for human beings. Move within,
but don't move the way fear makes you move.

19. One Stroke Down

We sense an impending danger in ecstatic love, that the experience will change us radically. And it's true. The love-thief steals the keys to our favorite rooms, steals our half-loves. Ayaz crushes the pearl. There is a destructive downstroke when soul-love enters. The physical pearl and its value disintegrate to powder in the presence of the king. Tremendous courage and abandon come with Ayaz's act. The courtiers feel it and prostrate themselves, hoping for grace.

The progress in a story of Rumi's is toward a moment when consciousness breaks open and the Friendship is felt here and now. The ocean of wisdom becomes this weather we walk. Something like a jump occurs (though it may not be anything we do), and life is wildly different. You're naked and cold. Hallaj³⁹ says to dive in the river and get the fur coat that is floating by. You plunge in, and it's a live bear! There's the moment, a gamble one doesn't know or care how it will turn out. This bear is going to wear you home.

Lightning, your presence
from ground to sky.
No one knows what becomes of me,
when you take me so quickly.

I can break off from anyone,
except the presence within.

Anyone can bring gifts.
Give me someone who takes away.

The Friend comes into my body
looking for the center, unable to find it, draws a blade, strikes anywhere.

WOODEN CAGES

I may be clapping my hands,
but I don't belong to a crowd of clappers.

Neither this nor that, I'm not part of a group that loves flute music or one that loves gambling or drinking wine.
Those who live in time, descended from Adam, made of earth and water,
I'm not part of that.

Don't listen to what I say,
as though these words came from an inside
and went to an outside.

Your faces are very beautiful,
but they are wooden cages.

You had better run from me.
My words are fire.

I have nothing to do with being famous,
or making grand judgments, or feeling full of shame. I borrow nothing.
I don't want anything from anybody.

I flow through human beings.
Love is my only companion.

MORE RANGE

We're friends with one who kills us,
who gives us to the ocean waves.

We love this death. Only ignorance says, Put it off awhile, day after tomorrow. Don't avoid the knife.

This friend only seems fierce, bringing your soul more range, perching your falcon on a cliff of the wind. Jesus on his cross, Hallaj on his. Those absurd executions hold a secret.

Cautious cynics claim they know what they're doing every moment and why.

Submit to love without thinking, as the sun rose this morning recklessly extinguishing our star-candle minds.

AYAZ AND THE KING'S PEARL

One day the king assembled his courtiers,
He handed the minister a glowing pearl.

"What would you say this is worth?"

"More gold

than a hundred donkeys could carry."

"Break it!"

"Sir, how could I waste your resources like that?"

The king presented him with a robe of honor and took back the pearl.

Then he put the pearl in his chamberlain's hand. "What would it sell for?"
"Half a kingdom, God preserve it!"

"Break it!"

"My hand could not move to do such a thing."

The king presented him with a robe of honor and an increase in his salary. So it went with each of the sixty courtiers. One by one they imitated the minister and the chamberlain and received their reward of new wealth.

The pearl was given to Ayaz. "Can you say how splendid this is?"

"It's more than I can say."

"Then break it, this second, into tiny pieces."

Ayaz had had a dream about this, and he had hidden two stones in his sleeve. He crushed the pearl to powder between them.

As Joseph at the bottom of the well listened to the end of his story, so such listeners understand success and failure as one thing.

Don't worry about forms. If someone wants your horse, let him have it. Horses are for hurrying ahead of others.

The court assembly
screamed at the recklessness of Ayaz. "How could you do that?"

"What the king says is worth more than any pearl. I honor the king, not some colored stone."

The courtiers immediately fell on their knees and put their foreheads on the ground. Their sighs went up like smoke asking forgiveness. The king gestured to his executioner as though to say, "Take out this trash."

Ayaz sprang forward, "Your mercy makes them bow like this. Give them their lives!
Raise their faces into yours. Let them wash in your cool washing place."

Ayaz in his speech to the king gets to this point and then the pen breaks.

"You picked me to crush the pearl.
Don't punish the others for my drunken obedience.
Punish them when I'm sober because I'll never be sober again!

Whoever bows down like they are bowing will not rise up in his old self. Like a gnat in buttermilk, they have become your buttermilk.
The mountains are trembling. The map and compass are the lines in your palm."

Husam, a hundred thousand impressions from spirit are wanting to come through here.

I feel stunned in this abundance, crushed and dead.

HALLAJ

Hallaj said what he said and went to the origin
through the hole in the scaffold.

I cut a cap's worth of cloth from his robe,
and it swamped over me head to foot.

Years ago I broke a branch of roses from the top of his wall. A thorn from that is still in my palm, working deeper.

From Hallaj, I learned to hunt lions,
but I became something hungrier than a lion.

I was a frisky colt. He broke me with a quiet hand on the side of my head.

A person comes to him naked. It's cold.
There's a fur coat floating in the river.

"Jump in and get it," he says.
You dive in. You reach for the coat.
It reaches for you.

It's a live bear that has fallen in upstream,
drifting with the current.

"How long does it take!" Hallaj yells from the bank.
"Don't wait," you answer. "This coat has decided to wear me home!"

A little part of a story, a hint.
Do you need long sermons on Hallaj?

20. Love's Excess

Someone asked once, "What is love?"
"Be lost in me," I said. "You'll know love when that happens."
Love has no calculating in it. That's why it's said to be a quality of God and not of human beings. God loves you is the only possible sentence. The subject becomes the object so totally that it can't be turned around. Who will the you pronoun stand for if you say, "You love God"?

Prose Preface to Book II of the Masnavi

I, you, he, she, we,
in the garden of mystic lovers,

these are not true
distinctions.

SHAMS TABRIZ

The extravagant perspective of Rumi's life and work is that there is a core of understanding and that that core is love, the heart. Saint Augustine talks about "the supersensual eye of the soul." The eighteenth-century mystic Emanuel Swedenborg says there is a light that illuminates the mind that is different from sunlight, and that is what the word enlightenment refers to. Those who experience these other sights and other hearings are often in a state of untranslatable joy that almost dissolves them with its delight.

It would be strange if poetry written from such knowing were not excessive. Being in the spirit is not a casual thing. Each ant is given its elegant belt at birth. This love we feel pours through us like giveaway song.

It's not true, though, to say that Rumi's poetry always comes from a trance state. An enlightened being is most often very focused, present in the moment, and fiercely practical, even when saying the most mystical things. "You have to understand the form of the body in order to understand the meaning of the light form within it."⁴⁰

And Rumi's knowing, like his father Bahauddin's,⁴¹ has many valences, which certainly includes the bulul, or mystical trance.

THE SOURCE OF JOY

No one knows what makes the soul wake up so happy! Maybe a dawn breeze has blown the veil from the face of God.

A thousand new moons appear. Roses open laughing. Hearts become perfect rubies like those from Badakshan.

The body turns entirely spirit.
Leaves become branches in this wind.

Why is it now so easy to surrender,
even for those already surrendered?

There's no answer to any of this.
No one knows the source of joy.

A poet breathes into a reed flute,
and the tip of every hair makes music.

Shams sails down clods of dirt from the roof, and we take jobs
as doorkeepers for him.

ROSES UNDERFOOT

The sound of salaams rising as waves
diminish down in prayer,
hoping for some trace of the one whose trace does not appear.

If anyone asks you to say who you are,
say without hesitation, soul
within soul within soul.

There's a pearl diver who does not know how to swim! No matter.
Pearls are handed him on the beach.

We lovers laugh to hear, "This should be more that and that more this," coming from people sitting in a wagon tilted in a ditch.

Going in search of the heart, I found a huge rose, and roses under all our feet!

How to say this to someone who denies it?
The robe we wear is the sky's cloth.

Everything is soul and flowering.

POETRY

I open and fill with love
and what is not love evaporates.

All the learning in books stays put on the shelf. Poetry, the dear words and images of song, comes down over me like mountain water.

BIRDSONG FROM INSIDE THE EGG

Sometimes a lover of God may faint
in the presence. Then the beloved bends and whispers in his ear, "Beggar, spread out your robe. I'll fill it with gold.

I've come to protect your consciousness.
Where has it gone? Come back!"

This fainting is because lovers want so much.
A chicken invites a camel into her henhouse,
and the whole structure is demolished.

A rabbit nestles down with its eyes closed in the arms of a lion. There is an excess in spiritual searching that is profound ignorance.

Let that ignorance be our teacher!
The Friend breathes into one who has no breath.

A deep silence revives the listening of those two who meet on the riverbank.

Like the ground turning green in a spring wind,
like birdsong beginning inside the egg,
like this universe coming into existence,

the lover wakes and whirls in a dancing joy,
then kneels down in praise.

EASTERN MYSTERY

I ask for the laughing, unconventional ones,
even them, to be broken,
for blood and sky to become one thing,
for revelation as startling as an ocean
that is neither wet nor dry.

I ask that lovers no longer be shy or concerned with right and wrong, with reputation or recognition. I have seen the universal intelligence offer its neck to the blade. I have asked why and been told,

Look around this gathering and find those who resemble Shams, who made Tabriz a source of Eastern mystery like China.

NO FLAG

I used to want buyers for my words.
Now I wish someone would buy me away from words.

I've made a lot of charmingly profound images,
scenes with Abraham and his father Azar,
who was famous for icons.

I'm so tired of what I've been doing.
Then one image without form came,
and I quit.

Look for someone else to tend the shop.
I'm out of the image-making business.

Finally I know the freedom of madness.

A random image arrives. I scream,
"Get out!" It disintegrates.

Only love.
Only the holder the flag fits into,
no flag.

21. Love's Bewilderment

Love loves flowing, a beyond-containment of blood and semen, wine and riverwater, amniotic fluid and the round bead of dew forming.

Flowering. Love cannot be held long within categories, likewise the poetry celebrating love. You might say that love loves confusion and not be far wrong. Love is metamorphosis, rapid and radical, agile, full of vigor and levity.

Love is the continuous alchemy of regions overlapping: animal, angelic, human, and the luminosity of the true human beings, their compassion and their cooking. None of this is sayable. It can only be lived. Rumi says, Stay bewildered in God, and only that. But the mind keeps questioning, turning away, I don't think so. There is strong resistance and fear and academic distancing in the rational precincts, which tend to mistrust any boundary-dissolving, beauty-relishing, ecstatic honesty.

God only knows, I don't,
what keeps me laughing.

The stem of a flower moves when the air moves.

I reach for a piece of wood. It turns into a lute.
I do some meanness. It turns out helpful.
I say one must not travel during the holy month.
Then I start out, and wonderful things happen.

In complete control, pretending control,
with dignified authority, we are charlatans.
Or maybe just a goat's-hair brush in a painter's hand.
We have no idea what we are.

MOSES AND THE SHEPHERD

Moses heard a shepherd on the road praying,
"God,
where are you? I want to help you, to fix your shoes and comb your hair. I want to wash your clothes and pick the lice off. I want to bring you milk and kiss your little hands and feet when it's time for you to go to bed. I want to sweep your room and keep it neat. God, my sheep and goats are yours.
All I can say remembering you is aaayyyyyy
and aaabbbbbbbbbbbb."

Moses could stand it no longer.

"Who are you talking to?"

"The one who made us and made the earth and made the sky."

"Don't talk about shoes and socks with God! And what's this with your little hands? Such blasphemous familiarity sounds like you're chatting with your uncles. Only something that grows needs milk. Only someone with feet needs shoes. Not God!"

The shepherd repented and tore his clothes and wandered out into the desert. A sudden revelation came then to Moses:

*You have separated me from one of my own.
Did you come as a prophet to unite or to sever?
I have given each being a separate and unique way
of seeing and knowing and saying that knowledge.*

*What seems wrong to you is right for him.
What is poison to one is honey to someone else.
Purity and impurity, sloth and diligence in worship, these mean nothing to me. I am apart from all that.*

Ways of worshipping are not to be ranked as better or worse. Hindus do Hindu things. The Dravidian Muslims in India do what they do. It's all praise, and it's all right. I am not glorified in acts *of worship. It's the worshipers! I don't hear the words they say. I look inside at the humility.

That broken-open lowliness is the reality. Forget phraseology! I want burning, burning. Be friends* with your burning. Those who pay attention to ways of behaving and speaking are one sort. Lovers who burn are another. Don't impose a property tax on a burned-out village. Don't scold the lover.

The "wrong" way he talks is better than a hundred
"right" ways of others.

Inside the Kaaba
it doesn't matter which way you point
your prayer rug!

The ocean diver doesn't need snowshoes!
The love-religion has no code or doctrine.

Only God.

So the ruby has nothing engraved on it!
It doesn't need markings.

God began speaking deeper mysteries to Moses, vision and words, which cannot be recorded here. Moses left himself and came back. He went to eternity and came back here. Many times this happened.

It's foolish of me
to try and say this. If I did say it,
it would uproot human intelligence.

Moses ran after the shepherd, following the bewildered footprints,

in one place moving like a castle across a chessboard. In another, sideways, like a bishop.

Now surging like a wave cresting,
now sliding down like a fish,
with always his feet
making geomancy symbols in the sand, recording his wandering state.

Moses finally caught up with him.
"I was wrong. God has revealed to me that there are no rules for worship. Say whatever and however your loving tells you to.

Your sweetest blasphemy is the truest devotion. Through you a whole world is freed.

Loosen your tongue and don't worry
what comes out. It's all the light of the spirit."

MORNING WIND

Wine so bitter all bitterness sweetens,
a beautiful face growing old.

The taste of
Khidr's spring, words that plant olive trees.
A man like the dawn
with a small suggestion,
You should visit a few times.

A prayer
at the graveside that resurrects the dead, silence telling half a secret, unspoken wish.
Morning wind,
we'll stay quiet. Whatever you have understood of us, go and tell that to the living,
what we've been hiding from them.

THE OCEAN'S MOTION

Love is an ocean. This wide sky,
a bit of foam on that.

Restless as Zuleikha
in her desire for Joseph, sky-changes move across
day and night. If there were no love, everything would freeze and be still. Instead, inorganic grains are entering plants. Plants enter animals;

animals enter spirit, and spirit sacrifices itself
for one breath
of that which made Mary with child. Each sapling lifts, and the universe winds like a locust swarm its wingrush toward perfection,
each particle purified
in a song of praise for motion.

IGNORANCE

I didn't know love would make me this crazy, with my eyes
like the river Ceyhun carrying me in its rapids
out to sea,
where every bit
of shattered boat
sinks to the bottom.

An alligator lifts its head and swallows
the ocean, then the ocean floor becomes a desert covering the alligator in sand drifts.
Changes do happen. I do not know how, or what remains of what has disappeared

into the absolute.

I hear so many stories
and explanations, but I keep quiet,
because I don't know anything,
and because something I swallowed in the ocean
has made me completely content with ignorance.

22. Lord of the Heart

Love is our aloneness with the lord of such beauty and depth that we're not lonely. The empty space of the guest house, not the guests moving through, the host and theater where mind and desire play out their myriad motions. As say Shakespeare is the great globe itself, not the players, nor the drowned book, not the jealous lover or the eloquently introspective athlete or the rugged king, who calls himself "old and foolish," rather the space those inhabit and the source. This love-region called lord is not imagination. This emptiness so dazzlingly full of emanation is what gnostics call the pleroma. Niffari calls it Ignorance. Someone else, the cloud of unknowing.

Words do not approach it hence the edge of self-satire that word-mystics barely keep in check. This is the one we know early on in life and come back to late. Riverlord, director of dreams, the company that most nourishes our soul, this is the great love we're given and feel bearing us along.

It's not fair to speak as though this were everyone's experience, because it isn't, and I do honor the pained vision, the bitter childhoods, the broken trust. Rumi focuses not so much on the nobility of suffering or its heartbreaking howl as on the ultimate expansion into mystery that this poetry tries to say. It began with the Friendship with Shams Tabriz. It is still unfolding, and as many of the poems imply, the unfolding is intimately woven in with seeing. John Ruskin says,

The greatest thing a human soul ever does in this world is to see something and tell what he saw in a plain way. To see clearly is poetry, prophecy, and religion all in one.⁴²

Bawa says something very similar.

Everything you see tells the story of God. Look at it. God is out spread, filling the entire universe. So look. You exist in a form. God is without form. You are the visible example, the sun. God is the light within the sun.⁴³

I am so small I can barely be seen.
How can this great love be inside me?

*Look at your eyes. They are small,
but they see enormous things.*

EYES

What is it that sees when vision is clear?
The core that has no story, has that ever seen anything?

Surely vision has loyalties.
Someone buying eye medicine does not see well,
but well enough, at least, to choose the cure.

Beyond day and night one watches
as your eyes close and open and close, as night turning day turns night, as eyes
like particles float
in the light that is your face,
that is the sun.

Without you our eyes might be a danger to the soul, but with you they become the same as the soul. When that happens, the heart is seeing!

You can say that the eyes see God, but it is God who sees, as in the Qur'an when the desert mountain looks at God, and eyes appear on every stone.

I am filled with you.
Skin, blood, bone, brain, and soul.
There's no room for lack of trust, or trust.
Nothing in this existence but that existence.

When you feel your lips becoming infinite
and sweet, like a moon in a sky,
when you feel that spaciousness inside,
Shams of Tabriz will be there too.

THE GRANARY

Sufi masters are those whose spirits existed
before the world. Before the body, they lived many lifetimes. Before seeds went into the ground, they harvested wheat.

Before there was an ocean, they strung pearls.
While the great meeting was going on about bringing human beings into existence,
they stood up to their chins in wisdom-water.

When some of the angels opposed creation,
the Sufi masters laughed and clapped
among themselves. Before materiality, they knew what it was like to be trapped

inside matter. Before there was a night sky, they saw Saturn. Before wheat grains, they tasted bread. With no mind, they thought.
Immediate intuition to them is the simplest act,
what to others would be epiphany. Much of our thought is of the past or the future.
They're free of those. Before a mine is dug, they judge coins. Before vineyards, they know the excitements to come. In July they feel December. In unbroken sunlight, they find shade. In fana, the state where objects dissolve, they recognize things and comment rationally. The open sky drinks from their circling cup. The sun wears the gold of their generosity. When two of them meet, they are no longer two. They are one and six hundred thousand. The ocean waves are their closest likeness, when wind makes from unity

the numerous. This happened to the sun and it broke into rays through the window, into bodies.

The disc of the sun does exist, but if you see only the ray-bodies, you may have doubts.
The human-divine combinations are a oneness.
Plurality, the apparent separation into rays.

Friend, we're traveling together. Throw off your tiredness. Let me show you one tiny spot of the beauty that can't be spoken. I'm like an ant that's gotten into the granary, ludicrously happy, and trying to lug out
a grain that's way too big.

THE GAZING-HOUSE

On the night when you cross the street
from your shop and your house to the cemetery,

you'll hear me hailing you from inside
the open grave, and you'll realize how we've always been together.

I am the clear consciousness core of your being, the same in ecstasy
as in self-hating fatigue.

That night, when you escape the fear of snakebite
and all irritation with the ants, you'll hear my familiar voice, see the candle being lit, smell the incense and the surprise meal fixed by the lover inside all your other lovers.

This heart tumult is my signal to you igniting
in the tomb, so don't fuss with the shroud and the graveyard road dust. Those get ripped open and washed away in the music of our meeting.

And don't look for me in a human shape!
I am inside your looking. No room for form with love this strong.

Beat the drum and let the poets speak. This is a day of purification for those who are already mature and initiated into what love is.

No need to wait until we die!
There's more to want here than money and being famous and bites of roasted meat.

Now, what shall we call this new kind of gazing-house that has opened in our town where people sit quietly and pour out their glancing like light, like answering?

THE GUEST HOUSE

This being human is a guest house.
Every morning a new arrival.

A joy, a depression, a meanness,
some momentary awareness comes
as an unexpected visitor.

Welcome and entertain them all!
Even if they're a crowd of sorrows,
who violently sweep your house empty of its furniture, still,
treat each guest honorably.
He may be clearing you out for some new delight.

The dark thought, the shame, the malice, meet them at the door laughing and invite them in.

Be grateful for whoever comes,
because each has been sent
as a guide from beyond.

Always check your inner state
with the lord of your heart.

Copper doesn't know it's copper,
until it's changing to gold.

Your loving doesn't know majesty,
until it knows its helplessness.

THE ONE THING YOU MUST DO

There is one thing in this world you must never forget to do. If you forget everything else and not this, there's nothing to worry about, but if you remember everything else and forget this, then you will have done nothing in your life.

It's as if a king has sent you to some country to do a task, and you perform a hundred other services, but not the one he sent you to do. So human beings come to this world to do particular work. That work is the purpose, and each is specific to the person. If you don't do it, it's as though a priceless Indian sword were used to slice rotten meat. It's a golden bowl being used to cook turnips, when one filing from the bowl could buy a hundred suitable pots. It's like a knife of the finest tempering nailed into a wall to hang things on.

You say, "But look, I'm using it. It's not lying idle." Do you hear how ridiculous that sounds? For a penny an iron nail could be bought. You say, "But I spend my energies on lofty projects. I study philosophy and jurisprudence, logic, astronomy, and medicine." But consider why you do those things. They are all branches of yourself and your impressiveness.

Remember the deep root of your being, the presence of your lord. Give yourself to the one who already owns your breath and your moments. If you don't, you'll be like the man who takes a ceremonial dagger and hammers it into a post for a peg to hold his dipper gourd. You'll be wasting valuable keenness and forgetting your dignity and purpose.

THIS WE HAVE NOW

This we have now
is not imagination.

This is not grief,
or joy, not a judging state,
or an elation, or a sadness.

Those come and go.
This is the presence
that doesn't.

It's dawn, Husam,
here in the splendor of coral,
inside the Friend, in the simple truth
of what Hallaj said.

What else could human beings want?

When grapes turn to wine,
they're wanting this.

When the night sky pours by,
it's really a crowd of beggars,
and they all want some of this.

This we are now
created the body, cell by cell,
like bees building a honeycomb.

The human body and the universe grew from this, not this from the universe and the human body.

A Note on Translation

I wonder, wonder, whom de doo doo—who BOOM,
who wrote the book of love.

The Monotones out of New Jersey asked that musical question in 1957, and my name may be on the cover of this one, but I am not the one they're looking for. Jelaluddin Rumi wrote the book of love. What he loves is the source of any truth and beauty coming through here. The distortions are mine.

You can never be sure, though, what is, and is not, transmitted in collaborative translation, or any translation, version, imitation, whatever you choose to call the bringing-over from one language and time into another. It's always a failure of one magnitude or another. Think of translating Hamlet into Chinese, or Faulkner into Farsi, Poe into Polish. It can't be done, but the attempt must be made. The same with Rumi into American.

I'll try to describe what I do. I look at one text in English and write another. For example, I did a collection of poems by a fourteenth-century Kashmiri woman named Lalla, or Laleshwari. The Naked Song poems came down in oral tradition for four hundred years before they were written down at all, some in Sanskrit, some in Kashmiri, some in both. Hundreds of lines from her poems are still actively a part of Kashmiri conversation. I don't read Kashmiri or Sanskrit, but Sir George Grierson and Lionel Barnett of the Royal Asiatic Society did read those languages. They published a book in 1920, Lalla-Vakyana, The Wise Sayings of Lal Ded, A Mystic Poetess of Ancient Kashmir. I looked at their book and the others listed in the back of mine to produce the text. I hope the words in it are some kin to Lalla's daring, darling, wandering songs. It's a process of attunement for me. There are many mystics that I cannot make versions of, because I don't feel connected enough to their words. Lionel and Sir George were not trying for that kind of closeness. On the contrary, they cultivated scholarly distance. Detachment was valued, and I am very grateful for their diligence and for the lifelong British stamina and scholarly passion of Reynold Nicholson and A. J. Arberry, the Cambridge Islamicists who brought Rumi to the West with their translations from the 1920s through the 1950s. My friend John Moyne has also sent me texts to work with over the years, and Nevit Ergin is another treasure. He has worked since the late 1950s to bring the entire Shams (Rumi's large collection of ghazals and quatrains, the Divani Shamsi Tabriz) out of Golpinarli's Turkish into English. (Nevit Ergin's translations are available from Words Distribution, 7900 Edgewater Drive, Oakland, CA 94621. Also from maypopbooks.com and 800-682-8637.) Now the work of bringing the complete text from Farsi to English must be done.

With Rumi I try to enter the ecstatic consciousness, the love that is the subject that generates the poetry. I move with the images and try to absorb the soul-growth truth being transmitted. When it feels like a connection has occurred, the words come quickly, and at the end I feel my head bowing in gratitude. It has been an almost daily practice for twenty-seven years.

Rumi's poetry was a continuous spontaneous outpouring. The poems have no titles in Persian. They are seamless, whereas I have given most of these titles. In English we feel the title is an organic part of the poem, but it may contribute here to a false feeling of a stop-start process. There are no full stops. Rumi's poetry should be felt as a whole like Whitman's Leaves of Grass or Wallace Stevens's Harmonium. Also, in this collection I often take what I hear as the tastiest lines from a poem without giving the context. That can be found in the earlier volumes, The Essential Rumi and The Soul of Rumi. The wider truth is that Rumi's poems all grow together in a field called the qalb, or the innermost heart.

This volume is an attempt to present poems in a handier, more visually spacious form than I did in the previous volumes. It is a book designed specifically for those whom Rumi calls lovers, who are often on the move and need a travel size. There are new poems here, fifteen of them, but this is mostly a recollecting, a revising and relining in some instances, of poems published in the other Harper San Francisco volumes.

Notes

PREFACE

1. Oceanfrog: Bawa Muhaiyaddeen told this version of a Sufi story. An oceanfrog comes to visit a ditchfrog, who is very proud of where he lives, a section of ditch two feet deep, four feet long, and three feet across. He jumps around demonstrating the elegant spaciousness of his place. "How do you like this?" "Very fine," says the oceanfrog. "What's it like where you live?" asks the ditchfrog; he has never seen or heard of the ocean. "I can't really describe how it is where I live. Someday I'll take you there." I had asked Bawa what the difference was between my consciousness and his. "Someone who lives in the confines of mind and desire is like the ditchfrog. The oceanfrog swims the ocean of grace. It is good for them to visit each other."

INTRODUCTION

2. The heart as "the comprehensive human reality": quoted from Hasan Shushud's Masters of Wisdom of Central Asia, trans. from the Turkish by Muhtar Holland (Coombe Springs Press, 1983), p. 143.

3. Thich Nhat Hanh, The Heart of Understanding: Commentaries on the Heart Sutra (Berkeley, CA: Parallax Press, 1988), p. 41.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF RUMI'S LIFE

4. Franklin D. Lewis, Rumi: Past and Present, East and West (Oxford, England: One World Publishers, 2000), p. 193.

CHAPTER 1. SPONTANEOUS WANDERING

Introductory Note

5. Panzaic: a made-up adjective for Sancho Panza, who rode a different journey than Quixote. He deserves his own quixotic word. No gaunt, bookish savior of damsels, the panzaic rider smells of donkey and spilled beer. He's commonsensical, ambitious for himself and family, earthy, and very loyal in his friendship.

6. Pir Vilayat Khan: the son and designated successor of Hazrat Inayat Khan, educated at the Sorbonne and Oxford. During the Second World War he served as a pilot in the British Royal Navy. After the war Pir Vilayat continued his spiritual training by studying with masters of many different traditions throughout India and the Middle East. He is a Pir in the lineage of the Chisti Sufi order. While honoring the initiatic tradition, Pir Vilayat is continually pioneering updated practices in the evolution of consciousness.

7. pp. xi–xii, 76, Nanao Sakaki, Break the Mirror, Blackberry Books, 1996. Originally published by North Point Press, 1987. See also Let's Eat Stars and Nanao or Never from Blackberry Books, 617 E. Neck Rd., Nobleboro, ME 04555 or www.blackberrybooksinc.com.

Five Things

8. Rabia (d. 801): the woman mystic from Basra who said that a love for God should not come out of fear or hope but in response to the beauty in the heart. She once sat indoors with her eyes closed on a lovely spring morning to teach that external magnificence is only a reflection of inner kindness and generosity, and that is divine grace.

9. Sema: the deep listening of the ecstatic turning.

The Many Wines

10. Majnun is the lover who loses his reason in the overwhelming experience of love for Layla—a good start. In the fourth grade I wrote such an extravagantly mushy valentine to Sandra Martin that it caused our parents to talk seriously on the phone for a long time. That was the 1940s. I wonder what I wrote.

Cooked Heads

11. A cooked head has gone beyond mind and desire, beyond inner and outer, freed of time and space yet still here, and on the road to Tabriz as well.

CHAPTER 2. SOHBET

Introductory Note

12. Am I not your lord?: The original agreement between the divine and the human is called Alast. It's a short conversation. God asks in Arabic, Alastu bi-rabbikum, "Am I not your Lord?" Rumi hears this question addressed to the not-yet-created humanity as a music that starts human consciousness dancing the instant, simultaneous, reply of manifest being, YES!

13. The Emily Dickinson quote is from R. W. Franklin's edition of The Poems of Emily Dickinson (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, Belknap Press, 1998), no. 466.

14. Kenneth Rexroth, Sacramental Acts, ed. Sam Hamill and Elaine Laura Kleiner (Port Townsend, WA: Copper Canyon, 1997), p. 25.

You Are Not Your Eyes

15. Illā and La are parts of the zīkr, the vocal or silent remembering, "There is no reality but God; there is only God." La'illāba il'Allābu is said to have three parts. The first part, La'illāba, is the denial, the abandonment of everything. The second part, il'Allāb, the intrusion, the explosion into the individual of divine presence. Hu, the third part, is the out-breathing of that presence. Another way of saying what zīkr is, is that La'illāba is the manifestation of creation and il'Allābu, the essence, that which created the cosmos. So the saying of it merges the two with in-breath and out-breath.

Imra'u 'l-Qays

16. Imra'u 'l-Qays (d. ca. A.D. 540) is considered the best pre-Islamic poet in Arabic. He is credited with being the first in that tradition to catch the reader's attention by referring at the beginning of a poem to a lost love.

CHAPTER 3. THE SUPERABUNDANCE OF ORDINARY BEING

Introductory Note

17. Rainer Maria Rilke, Ahead of All Parting, trans. Stephen Mitchell (New York: Random House, 1995), p. 387.

Zuleikha

18. Zuleikha was the wife of Potiphar the Egyptian. For Rumi she is a type of the lover, like Majnun, so lost in her love for the handsome Joseph that she hears every phrase and every natural sound, the wind, the fire's crackling, birdcalls, as messages from Joseph.

CHAPTER 4. SUDDEN WHOLENESS

Introductory Note

19. The first two haiku are from Basho, On Love and Barley, Haiku of Basho, trans. Lucien Stryk (New York: Penguin Books, 1985), pp. 72, 43. The last is from Robert Hass's Essential Haiku (Hopewell, NJ: Ecco, 1994), p. 11.

CHAPTER 6. A NEW LIFE

Introductory Note

20. In dreams: I came across this Gilani reference in Andrew Harvey's Perfume of the Desert (Wheaton, IL: Quest Books, 1999), p. 55.

21. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen, The Book of God's Love (Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 1981), p. 84.

Nasub's Changing

22. For the full story of Nasuh see The Essential Rumi, pp. 161–65.

CHAPTER 7. GRIEF

Introductory Note

23. "The feel of not to feel it" is from Keats's sonnet "In drear-nighted December . . ."

The Death of Saladin

24. Saladin: Saladin Zarkub, a goldsmith in Konya. There are hagiographic miniatures that show Rumi leading Saladin out of his goldsmith's shop and into the street to begin the sema. Rumi heard an essential music in the goldsmith's hammering and began to turn in the ecstasy of his listening. Saladin had come to Konya in 1235, already a student, like Rumi, of Burhan Maqaqqiq. When Shams arrived in 1244, the two would meet in Saladin's shop or in his home. After Shams's disappearance, Saladin became the friend that Rumi loved as a reminder of the deep presence. In 1248 when Saladin died, Rumi led a mystical dance with flute and drum through the streets of Konya to celebrate Saladin's urs, the soul union of a great being with the divine. The friendship of Saladin and Rumi was further strengthened by the marriage of Rumi's oldest son, Sultan Velad, to Saladin's daughter Fateme Khatun.

CHAPTER 8. TAVERN MADNESS

Introductory Note

25. The Junnaiyd quotation is from Andrew Harvey's Perfume of the Desert (Wheaton, IL: Quest Books, 1999), p. 146.

26. The story of Buddha and Mara is from Thich Nhat Hanh's The Heart of Understanding: Commentaries on the Heart Sutra (Berkeley, CA: Parallax Press, 1988), pp. 42–45.

27. Matzoobs are crazy wisdom people, as irrational as a tiny mantis in our front yard, or Tibet, or a quantum leap through a black hole, or love, or an aneurysm in the brain, or dreams of the dead fixing food. Matzoobs know the mad health of Macchu Picchu and the statuette of a ram caught in a golden thicket that archeologists found in the graves of Ur.

CHAPTER 9. ABSENCE

Introductory Note

28. Junnaiyd (d. 910) played a key role in establishing the "sober" school of Sufism.

29. The Poems of Emily Dickinson (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, Belknap Press, 1998), p. 517, no. 1344.

30. I reworked this quatrain from a version quoted in Andrew Harvey's Perfume of the Desert, p. xiii.

CHAPTER 10. ANIMAL ENERGIES

Introductory Note

31. Hazrat Inayat Khan, founder of the Sufi Order International, came to the West in 1910 as representative of the highest musical traditions of India. He brought a message of love, harmony, and beauty that was the essence of Sufi teaching and a revolutionary approach to harmonizing Western and Eastern spirituality. He says, "The work of the inner life is to make God a reality, so that He is no more an imagination; that this relationship that man has with God may seem to him more real than any other relationship in this world; and when this happens, then all relationships, however near and dear, become less binding. But at the same time, a person does not become cold; he becomes more loving." From The Inner Life, The Sufi Message of Hazrat Inayat Khan, vol. 1 (The Hague: East-West Publications, 1989).

CHAPTER 11. LOVE'S SECRET

Introductory Note

32. The Glance (New York: Viking, 1999), p. 34.

CHAPTER 13. SHIFT FROM ROMANCE TO FRIENDSHIP

The Wrist

33. Muhammad's Night of Power, the night on which the Qur'an came through him, is traditionally celebrated on the twenty-seventh night of Ramadan.

CHAPTER 14. UNION

Introductory Note

34. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen: I had thought to put here a brief biography, but I can't do it. As he taught so beautifully, a human being is too vast to be put in words. Bawa always turned away questions about his personal life. I am not the one to try to say who the being was who came to me in a dream in a ball of light on May 2, 1977. I am grateful beyond words for the heart-opening work he did and that continues with me.

CHAPTER 15. DIE BEFORE YOU DIE

Husam

35. Husam: Husam Chelebi, Rumi's scribe, and one of Shams's students. One day Rumi and Husam were walking in the gardens of Meram. Husam suggested that Rumi begin a poem in the masnavi form (rhyming couplets), whereupon Rumi pulled from his turban the first eighteen lines of what was to become the opening of Book I of his masterpiece, the Masnavi, the famous "Reed Flute's Song" section. During the next twelve years the mysterious collaboration continued. Rumi sometimes refers to the Masnavi as "The Book of Husam," and he often says that he is the empty flute, Husam the breath that makes the Masnavi music.

CHAPTER 16. HARSH EVIDENCE

Introductory Note

36. W. H. Auden: The Auden stanza may be found in his Collected (Vintage), but more appropriately for the theme here, look for it in Tell Me the Truth About Love, Ten Poems by W. H. Auden (Random House), compiled in 1994 by Edward Mendelson, executor of Auden's estate. Here are the final three stanzas of "As I Walked Out One Evening."

"O look, look in the mirror,
O look in your distress;
Life remains a blessing
although you cannot bless.

"O stand, stand at the window
As the tears scald and start;
You shall love your crooked neighbour
With your crooked heart."

It was late, late in the evening,
The lovers they were gone;
The clocks had ceased their chiming,
And the deep river ran on.

Kharrāqani's Marriage

37. Kharrāqani (d. 1034) is one of those Sufis who have no visible teacher. "I am amazed at those who declare that they require this or that master. You are well aware that I have never been taught by any man. God was my guide, though I have the greatest respect for all the masters." Others in this "line" are Attar of Nishapur, who was guided by the being of light of Hallaj Mansour, and Ibn Arabi, who was a disciple of Khidr, the invisible master of those who are masterless! Khidr's "guidance" does not consist in leading all uniformly to the same goal. Khidr helps one attain to the Khidr of one's individual being, the spring of life, the esoteric truth that frees one from literal religion. Kharrāqani says, "Each person is oriented toward a quest for his personal invisible guide, or he entrusts himself to the collective, magisterial authority as the intermediary between himself and revelation."

CHAPTER 18. LOVE DOGS

Love Dogs

38. Khidr; another name for a mysterious, but nonetheless real, function. This one has to do with how we are guided in our inner lives by one beyond our knowing. Khidr in the Islamic world is felt to be a being that exists on the edge between the seen and unseen. When Moses vows to find the place "where the two seas meet," he encounters Khidr. There have been other sightings.

He is associated with the color green. Although not mentioned by name in the Qur'an, he is assumed to be the one that Moses meets and wishes to travel with and learn from, who does such violent and inexplicable things that Moses cannot bear to be with him. In the famous story (Qur'an 18:60–83) Moses and Khidr must part, after Khidr explains the reasons for what he has done, because Moses does not have patience enough to endure the truth of Khidr's harsh obedience.

Khidr seems especially connected with solitaries and those without visible teachers. Ibrahim, who gave up his kingdom for the kingdom within, says, "I lived four years in the wilderness. Khidr the Green Ancient was my companion. He taught me the Name of God."

CHAPTER 19. ONE STROKE DOWN

Introductory Note

39. Al-Hallaj Mansour was martyred in Baghdad in 922 for saying, Ana'l Haqq, or I am the truth. I am God.

CHAPTER 20. LOVE'S EXCESS

Introductory Note

40. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen, A Mystical Journey (Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 1990), p. 92.

41. In Discourse No. 10 Rumi tells a story of his father, Bahauddin. A government official comes to ask advice. Bahauddin says the official shouldn't have taken the chance. "I am subject to various states," he explains. "In one I can speak and in another I do not speak. In one state I can listen to the stories of other lives and respond to them. In another I withdraw to my room and see no one. In yet another I am utterly distraught, absorbed in God, unable to communicate at all. It's too risky for you to have come here on the chance I might be able to have conversation." In his surrender, these regions flow over him like weather.

He's not in control of them. He's on retreat with his outrageous soul.
This is the fluidity and freedom of love's excess.

CHAPTER 22. LORD OF THE HEART

Introductory Note

42. This Ruskin quote is from Modern Painters, vol.3, pt. 4, ch. 16.

43. Questions of Life—Answers of Wisdom, vol. 2 (Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 2001), pp. 40–41.

A NOTE ON TRANSLATION

The Monotones from Newark, New Jersey—lead singer Charles Patrick, with Warren Davis, George Malone, Warren and John Ryanes, and John Smith—are the quintessential one-hit wonders of the 1950s. These five young men hit upon the words and music of "The Book of Love," and while they were rehearsing, some children outside were throwing a ball against the wall. At a key point the ball hit the window, not breaking it but making a loud BOOM, right at the point where that now appears in the song. Everyone agreed it should be incorporated.

Well I wonder, wonder whom, de doo doo, who BOOM (the children's ball)
who wrote the book of love . . .

I like the grammatical wavering between whom and the more natural who. Sufis hear that sound as the breathing creative vibration, HUUUUUU. Boom.

Index of Titles and First Lines

- A Cap to Wear in Both Worlds*, 58
A certain man had a jealous wife and a very, 83
A certain Sufi tore his robe in grief, 52
A Great Wagon, 147
A lover looks at creekwater and wants to be, 126
A man is wandering the marketplace at noon, 134
A man sits in an orchard, fruit trees full, 104
A moth flying into the flame says, 64
A naked man jumps in the river, hornets swarming, 94
A night full of talking that hurts, 137
A Teacher's Pay, 99
A thousand half-loves, 30
After days of feasting, fast, 35
All I know of spirit, 138
Always check your inner state, 180
Amazed Mouth, 23
An ant hurries along a threshing floor, 21
An empty mirror and your worst destructive habits, 138
Any Chance Meeting, 42
Aphrodite singing ghazals. A sky with, 22
Are you jealous of the ocean's generosity, 8
As elephants remember India, 31
As everything changes overnight, I praise, 100
At that moment his spirit grows wings and lifts, 42
Auction, 31
Ayaz and the King's Pearl, 153
Begin, 24
Birdsong, wind, 24
Birdsong from Inside the Egg, 161

Birdwings, 47
Blasphemy and the Core, 148
Blessing the Marriage, 35
Breadmaking, 75
Burnt Kabob, 103
Can you find another market like this, 26
Candle at Noon, 134
Candlelight Becomes Moth, 65
Clear Being, 96
Close to Being True, 88
Come to the orchard in spring, 91
Cooked Heads, 6
Dance, when you're broken open, 138
Dervishes, 134
Did you hear that winter's over, 26
Do you know why your soul-mirror, 112
Don't feed both sides of yourself equally, 75
Don't listen to anything I say, 55
Doves, 134
Drowning, 93
Drumsound rises on the air, 8
Drunks fear the police, 59
Eastern Mystery, 162
Empty Boat, 126
Escaping to the Forest, 41
Everyone can see how they have polished the mirror, 99
Excuse my wandering, 3
Eyes, 175
Fear, 99
Five Things, 3
For sixty years I have been forgetful, 15
Friend, our closeness is this, 144
Fringe, 59
Go with Muddy Feet, 2
God has given us a dark wine so potent that, 4
God has said Be moderate with eating and drinking, 99
God only knows, I don't, 165
Hallaj, 156

Hallaj said what he said and went to the origin, 156
Hangover Remorse, 122
Harsb Evidence, 133
 Held like this, to draw in milk, 122
 Here is a story of a young prince who suddenly sees, 104
Hidden Inside, 89
 Hiding is the hidden purpose, 89
 How can we know the divine qualities, 88
Husam, 124
 I am a glass of wine with dark sediment, 55
 I am filled with you, 175
 I am so small I can barely be seen, 174
 I ask for the laughing, unconventional ones, 162
 I can break off from anyone, 151
 I didn't know love would make me this, 171
 I have been given a glass, 6
 I have five things to say, 3
 I hear nothing in my ear but your voice, 36
 I honor those who try, 96
 I may be clapping my hands, 152
 I open and fill with love, 161
 I reach for a piece of wood. It turns into a lute, 165
I Throw It All Away, 50
I Trust You, 127
 I used to want buyers for my words, 163
 I want to be in such passionate adoration, 145
 If everyone could see what love is, 90
 If the beloved is everywhere, 112
 If you love love, 42
 If you want to learn theory, 65
 If you want what visible reality can give, 13
Ignorance, 171
I'm Not Saying This Right, 56
Imadu'l-Mulk, 128
 Imagine the phenomenal world as a furnace, 73
Imra'u 'l-Qays, 16
 Imra'u 'l-Qays, king of the Arabs, 16
 In complete control, pretending control, 165

In every gathering, in any chance meeting, 42
 In the early morning hour, 120
 In the slaughterhouse of love they kill only, 127
 In your light I learn how to love, 7
 Inside a lover's heart there's another world, 65
 Inside this new love, die, 33
 Inside water, a waterwheel turns, 147
 Is there anything better than selling figs, 43
 I've broken through to longing now, 51
 Judge a moth by the beauty of its candle, 124
 Keep walking, though there's no place to get to, 149
Kharraqani's Marriage, 132
 Last year, I admired the wines. This, 103
 Let the lover be disgraceful, crazy, 60
 Let your sunlight shine on this piece of dung, 133
 Lightning, your presence, 151
Like Light Over This Plain, 64
 Listen to your essential self, the Friend, 97
Longing, 98
 Longing is the core of mystery, 98
 Look inside and find where a person, 6
Looking into the Creek, 100
 Love comes sailing through and I scream, 41
 Love comes with a knife, not some, 47
Love Dogs, 146
 Love is an ocean. This wide sky, 170
 Love is not condescension, never, 121
 Love is the way messengers, 89
 Lovers are alive to the extent, 125
 Lovers think they're looking for each other, 8
 Love's way becomes a pen sometimes, 60
Mashallah, 74
 Midnight, but your forehead, 58
More Range, 153
Morning Wind, 170
Moses and the Shepherd, 166
 Moses heard a shepherd on the road praying, 166
 Muhammed gave this indication of how to know, 135

Muhammed said, "Three kinds of people, 122
My soul keeps whispering, "Quickly, 148
My work is to carry this love, 51
Nasub's Changing, 42
Near the end you saw rose and thorn together, 60
No Better Gift, 29
No better love than love with no object, 147
No Flag, 163
No one knows what makes the soul wake up, 159
Notice how each particle moves, 13
Now, what if a dog's owner, 94
On the night when you cross the street, 178
One day the king assembled his courtiers, 153
One night a man was crying Allah! Allah, 146
One Swaying Being, 121
Out beyond ideas of wrongdoing and rightdoing, 123
Out of nowhere a horse, 23
Pale sunlight, 51
Passage into Silence, 37
Pattern, 30
People want you to be happy, 134
Philosophers have said that we love music, 27
Poetry, 161
Put This Design in Your Carpet, 20
Quietness, 33
Real value comes with madness, 57
Reason has no way to say, 117
Remember the story of the king who is so enraged, 128
Response to Your Question, 12
Roses Underfoot, 160
Rules About Restraint, 142
Sexual Urgency and True Virility, 78
Sitting in the Orchard, 104
Sky-Circles, 49
Smoke, 55
Some commentary clarifies, but with love, 102
Some huge work goes on growing, 126
Some Kiss We Want, 33

Some nights stay up till dawn, 129
Some souls have gotten free of their bodies, 41
Someone offhand to the Caliph of Egypt, 78
Someone who does not run, 49
Sometimes a lover of God may faint, 161
Soul, Heart, and Body One Morning, 123
Special Plates, 13
Spirit and Body, 75
Spiritual experience is a modest woman, 20
Stay together, friends, 34
Straw and Grasses, 143
Sufi masters are those whose spirits existed, 176
That Quick, 126
The Ache and Confusion, 60
The Allure of Love, 49
The Basket of Fresh Bread, 65
The center leads to love, 51
The clear bead at the center changes everything, 30
The Circle, 43
The Company of Lovers, 142
The Core of Masculinity, 96
The core of masculinity does not derive, 96
The Death of Saladin, 46
The Dog Problem, 94
The essence of darkness is light, 37
The Friend comes into my body, 151
The Gazing-House, 178
The Generations I Praise, 121
The Granary, 176
The ground's generosity takes in our compost, 52
The Guest House, 179
The King, the Handmaiden, and the Doctor, 112
The Look That Opens, 143
The Many Wines, 4
The minute I heard my first love story, 169
The morning wind spreads its fresh smell, 98
The Music, 15
The Music We Are, 26

The Ocean Surge, 145
The Ocean's Motion, 170
The One Thing You Must Do, 181
The Polisher, 100
The Prince of Kabul, 104
The Public Bath, 73
The Purpose of Emotion, 52
The Road Home, 21
The rule that covers everything is, 142
The Silent Articulation of a Face, 47
The soul: a wide listening sky, 23
The soul is a newly skinned hide, bloody, 127
The Soul's Friend, 97
The sound of salaams rising as waves, 160
The Source of Joy, 159
The Stupid Things I've Done, 133
The Sunrise Ruby, 120
The Waterwheel, 34
The way of love is not, 49
The way the soul is with the senses and the intellect, 100
The Wrist, 111
The young seeker wonders, How could a teacher, 132
There are two types on the path, those, 98
There is a passion in me that doesn't, 58
There is a way of passing away from the personal, 124
There is no reality but God, says, 143
There is nourishment like bread, 142
There is one thing in this world you must never, 181
There is some kiss we want, 33
There was a feast. The king was in his cups, 75
There You Are, 136
There's a morning where presence comes over you, 123
There's a shredding that's really a healing, 137
There's a strange frenzy in my head, 58
There's Nothing Ahead, 8
There's someone swaying by your side, 74
They try to say what you are, spiritual or sexual, 91
Think that you're gliding out from the face of a cliff, 73

This being human is a guest house, 179
This Is Enough, 22
 This is now. Now is. Don't postpone, 24
This Market, 26
 This marriage be wine with halvah, 35
 This moment this love comes to rest in me, 30
This Torture, 68
This We Have Now, 182
 Those who have reached their arms, 14
 Today, like every other day, we wake up empty, 123
Two Days of Silence, 35
Two Ways of Running, 83
Uzayr, 22
Walnuts, 27
 We have a huge barrel of wine, but no cups, 57
 We tremble, thinking we're about to dissolve, 88
 We wait for inspiration and ask no fee, 143
 We're friends with one who kills us, 153
 What can I say to someone so curled up, 93
What Draws You?, 98
What Hurts the Soul?, 88
 What I say makes me drunk, 43
 What is it that sees when vision is clear, 175
 What sort of person says that he or she wants, 133
What Was Said to the Rose, 15
 What was said to the rose that made it open, 15
 When I see your face, the stones start spinning, 147
 When love itself comes to kiss you, 30
 When school and mosque and minaret, 134
 When the ocean comes to you as a lover, 29
 When you are with everyone but me, 67
 When you feel your lips becoming infinite, 176
 When you hear dirty story. 2
When Words Are Tinged with Lying, 135
Where You Love From, 6
 Which is worth more, a crowd of thousands, 36
 Which reminds me of the sons of Uzayr, 22
 Who are you? The inner vision of consciousness, 111

Who looks out with my eyes? What is, 56
Who Makes These Changes?, 93
Who Says Words with My Mouth?, 56
Why ask about behavior when you are soul-essence, 12
Why should we tell you our love stories, 68
Wine so bitter all bitterness sweetens, 170
Wonder Without Willpower, 60
Wooden Cages, 152
Yesterday the beauty of early dawn, 121
You are an ocean in a drop of dew, 63
You Are Not Your Eyes, 14
You bind me, and I tear away in a rage, 56
You have said what you are, 129
You left ground and sky weeping, 46
You may be planning departure, as a human soul, 50
You play with the great globe of union, 50
You that come to birth and bring the mysteries, 29
You wreck my shop and my house and now my heart, 59
Your Defects, 138
Your Face, 50
Your grief for what you've lost lifts a mirror, 47
You're inside every kindness. When a sick, 136
You're song, 149
You've so distracted me, 7
Zikr, 94
Zuleikha, 19
Zuleikha let everything be the name of Joseph, 19

About the Author

COLEMAN BARKS is a renowned poet who taught English and poetry at the University of Georgia for many years. He now focuses on writing, readings, and performances.

Visit www.AuthorTracker.com for exclusive information on your favorite HarperCollins author.

Credits

Grateful acknowledgement is made to the following for permission to reprint previously published material.

W. H. Auden: "As I Walked Out One Evening," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden., from W. H. Auden: The Collected Poems by W. H. Auden. Used by permission of Random House, Inc.

Rainer Maria Rilke: "Elegy 9," from The Selected Poetry of Rainer Maria Rilke, translated by Stephen Mitchell, copyright © 1982 by Stephen Mitchell. Used by permission of Random House, Inc.

Basho: "Even in Kyoto," The Essential Haiku: Versions of Basho, Busson & Issa, Edited and with an Introduction by Robert Hass. Introduction and selection copyright © 1994 by Robert Hass. Used by permission of Harper-Collins Publishers. "Samurai talk" and "You, the butterfly," from On Love and Barley by Basho, translated by Lucien Stryk, copyright © 1985 by Lucien Stryk. Used by permission of Penguin Publishers.

Rumi: Poems originally published in Open Secret, Unseen Rain, This Longing, and Feeling the Shoulder of the Lion, translated by John Moyne and Coleman Barks. Introductions and translations copyright © 1984, 1986, 1988, 1991 by Coleman Barks. Reprinted by arrangement with Shambhala Publications, Inc., Boston, www.shambhala.com.

Emily Dickinson: #466 "I dwell in possibility," and #1344 "The infinite a sudden guest," reprinted by permission of the publishers and the Trustees of Amherst College from The Poems of Emily Dickinson: Variorum Edition, Ralph W. Franklin, ed., Cambridge, MS.: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, copyright © 1998 by the President and Fellows of Harvard College. Copyright © 1951, 1955, 1979 by the President and Fellows of Harvard College.

Nanao and Gary Snyder: Nanao's poem "Go with Muddy Feet," and Snyder's comments are reprinted by permission of Blackberry Books, 617 East Neck Road, Nobleboro, ME 04555. www.blackberrybooksme.com.

Kenneth Rexroth: 9 lines from "When We With Sappho," from Collected Shorter Poems, copyright © 1944 by Kenneth Rexroth. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp.

Thich Nhat Hanh: Reprinted from The Heart of Understanding: Commentaries on the Prajñāparamita Heart Sutra (1988) by Thich Nhat Hanh with permission of Parallax Press, Berkeley, CA, www.parallax.org.

Copyright

RUMI: THE BOOK OF LOVE: Poems of Ecstasy and Longing. Copyright © 2003 by Coleman Barks. All rights reserved under International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. By payment of the required fees, you have been granted the non-exclusive, non-transferable right to access and read the text of this e-book on-screen. No part of this text may be reproduced, transmitted, down-loaded, decompiled, reverse engineered, or stored in or introduced into any information storage and retrieval system, in any form or by any means, whether electronic or mechanical, now known or hereinafter invented, without the express written permission of HarperCollins e-books.

Adobe Acrobat eBook Reader October 2007

ISBN 978-0-06-157916-5

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1